HISTORICAL NOTE

The Jamaica Plain Committee on Central America (JPCOCA) formed in 1981 when members of the Jamaica Plain (JP) neighborhood of Boston decided to create a local social and political activist group. JPCOCA's mission was to raise awareness about the injustices taking place in Central America by informing residents of JP through presentations, speaking engagements and grassroots political activism.

Virginia Zanger and Carol Pryor, along with other members of the group were students during the Vietnam Era; heavily active in the political and social protest movement. Based on those experiences, they decided that JPCOCA would focus on doing what they could for each cause without becoming too heavily invested or over committing their time and resources. The first cause JPCOCA addressed was the injustices taking place in El Salvador during its civil war (1980-1992). Members of the committee disagreed with the United States' policy towards El Salvador including U.S. support of the Salvadoran government, aid for the Salvadoran military aid and the treatment of Salvadoran refugees. Some of their initial outreach activities were signature drives and speaking events.

In December of 1982, JPCOCA contacted Massachusetts Congressman John Joseph "Joe" Moakley's office to set up a meeting to discuss the Salvadoran refugee issue. They prepared for their first encounter with Joe Moakley by meeting with a lobbyist. At the lobbyist's suggestion they made sure to pay Moakley a compliment, take a picture with him for the local press and to ask him for something that was specific to his district. It was at this first meeting, in January 1983, that members of JPCOCA told Moakley of their concerns for their Salvadoran neighbors who, if caught living in Boston illegally, would be sent back to El Salvador in the midst of a civil war and risked being killed for their time abroad.

Although the atrocities of the Salvadoran civil war were covered in the national media, it wasn't until after meeting with JPCOCA that Joe Moakley realized the direct impact the Salvadoran civil war had on his Salvadoran constituents and their families. Another result from this meeting with JPCOCA, was that Congressman Moakley began working on legislation to help Salvadorans gain refugee status in the United States.

Starting in 1983, Moakley filed Extended Voluntary Departure (EVD) legislation that would allow Salvadoran refugees a temporary stay of deportation and work authorization. It wasn't until 1990 that Moakley's legislation passed with a new name Temporary Protected Status (TPS). This legislation, also known as the Moakley-DeConcini Bill, allowed certain immigrants fleeing civil wars, natural disasters and other conditions temporary legal residency and work authorization for a set period of time.

The Jamaica Plain Committee on Central America remained active until the late 1980s with much of their energy and resources focused on El Salvador, Salvadoran refugees and the Salvadoran civil war. They disbanded in the early 1990s, presumably because they achieved many of their goals. They regrouped briefly after the death of Congressman Moakley in May 2001 to host an event honoring the late congressman and his achievements.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

The collection, donated by JPCOCA members Fran Price, Carol Pryor and Ginny Zanger, tells the story of the local efforts of the Jamaica Plain Committee on Central America and the international change it set in motion.

The bulk of the collection dates from the early 1980s until 1989. Many of the folders consist of correspondence between committee members and Joe Moakley or Moakley's aide, Jim McGovern and news clippings about El Salvador from local and national newspapers. The collection also includes event flyers, mission statements, a protest banner, photographs and form letters that describe how the committee functioned and the activities it sponsored. Folders from 2001 document the group's efforts to organize an event to honor the late congressman and his legacy. The files are arranged chronologically, undated materials are filed at the beginning of the collection.
