Letters to the Editor

Editor:
The Fall 1991 edition of Suffolk University Magazine was superb! I could not put it down until I read it, cover to cover!

Of particular interest to me were the articles on Czechoslovakia. I only wish that I were a student at Suffolk today and could avail myself of the opportunity to meet students from what was until just recently the “Eastern Bloc.” In my day, as a government major, the most ambitious trip I took was to the mock Student U.N. General Assembly in New York. In those days, too, it was Professor Judith Dushku (then, Rasmussen) who took the lead in organizing us. I frequently think of some of her classes, speakers, etc. The trip to both Hungary and Czechoslovakia is one I am sure that the students and faculty will never forget!

One correction that I feel should be noted is relative to the article on your commencement. The correction is that Adlai Stevenson never served as “U.S. Vice-President” as the article states. Rather he was Governor of Illinois, two-time presidential nominee of the Democratic Party and an ambassador to the United Nations during the Kennedy-Johnson administration.

That being a very minor error, I want to end on a positive note. I was also very impressed with the article on the new Ridgeway building. It must be a great addition to the campus!

Suffolk certainly has come a long way! Keep the presses rolling. I feel your magazine is as professional and readable as they come—a true joy!

Dean S. Carter, BA68

Editor’s note: There was a Vice-President Adlai Stevenson, who served from 1893 to 1897. But the Adlai Stevenson that The Honorable Jim R. Carrigan referred to ran for president of the United States in 1952 and 1956, and was never a vice-president.

Editor:
I would like to express my highest compliments to you and your staff regarding the new layout of the Suffolk University Magazine.

The cover photos are wonderful. The features are interesting and the newsclips are informative. After assisting in the creation of publications at my workplace, I can appreciate how much hard work you and your staff have put into this magazine. You are to be commended.

Michelle A. Leivi, BS90

About the cover:

Literature is the subject of one of the 12 panels in the stained glass window in the lobby of the Frank Sawyer Building. The panels date from the building’s construction as the Boston City Club in 1915. They were located in the club’s main entrance corridor overlooking a medieval-style dining hall, and paid tribute to the professions and trades of the club’s membership. They were gathered together into one window when the building was rehabilitated for use by Suffolk University. The window was designed by Knight, Bagge and Anderson, Inc., and installed by Wilbur Burnham Studios, prior to the dedication of the Sawyer Building on April 29, 1982.

Law School Renovations Completed

The move of the bookstore and several faculty and student services offices from the Archer Building to the new Ridgeway building last year, allowed the Law School to expand its facilities. CLAS also gained a new physics lab.

The summer-long renovations in both the Archer and Donahue buildings included asbestos removal and installation of a new sprinkler system, and resulted in five new classrooms and seminar rooms, and several faculty offices being added to the Law School space.

A new and larger mailroom is on the first floor of the Archer Building, and the University Police office moved into the old mailroom space off the lobby. A new Law Student Activities office, with a large central area for student organizations and two conference rooms, is located in the old bookstore. Next door are a new CLAS Physics Department lab, a faculty office and storage space.
On the first floor of the Donahue Building are an expanded Law Registrar’s office, Law Placement Library and new Financial Aid offices.

On the second floor of the Donahue Building are two new conference rooms. The former Student Bar Association office is a classroom with monitors for showing interactive and demonstration videos.

The third floor of the Archer Building, the area formerly occupied by college administrative offices and undergraduate classrooms, houses a suite of eight new Law faculty offices; a new 100-seat amphitheater-style classroom, with a large arched window, a large center screen and two satellite monitors; the Legal Practice Skills Center, with private offices for the nine full-time instructors who teach legal writing and research; a second classroom with permanent seating and state-of-the-art video technology; the Transnational Law Journal’s main office; and a student lounge. The Journal continues to have a small research office adjacent to the Pallot Library.

defray the cost of painting, new carpeting, lighting and furniture in the Masterman Lounge. Inside the Pallot Library are new staff offices and a student conference room. Additional staff offices, including one for the library’s director of technical services, are located nearby.

In the Donahue Building, a new reference desk is on the first floor of Mugar Library, and new computer terminals give students easy access to legal research materials.

The fifth and sixth floors of the Archer Building continue to house the biology, chemistry and physics classrooms, labs and faculty offices which were renovated in 1986.

On the fifth floor of the Donahue Building are new Westlaw and Lexis training classrooms, two new faculty offices, and a copy room. Secretarial facilities are on the sixth floor.
Suffolk ad takes the gold

For the second consecutive year, Suffolk University has received a first-place gold award in the Admissions Marketing Report’s annual competition for the best in university and college advertising.

The advertisement, with the message "For our MBA students, this is a power trip," received top honors in the category of "Outdoor Transit Billboard" advertising. The ad emphasized the accessibility of Suffolk University by the MBTA transportation system. The winning ad was designed by the public relations firm of Niblett/Devine, Inc. of Quincy, Massachusetts.

BCE comes to Suffolk

The Boston Chamber Ensemble (BCE) took up residence at Suffolk University earlier this year. Founded in 1989, BCE is a semi-professional permanent chamber orchestra with more than 40 musicians and vocalists, from which smaller ensembles are drawn.

According to Raymond H. Kelton, associate professor in the Humanities and Modern Languages Department, BCE will give five evening concerts and three free afternoon concerts at Suffolk, in exchange for rehearsal space and use of the C. Walsh Theatre.

“This is a ground-breaking venture,” said Kelton. “It’s good publicity for Suffolk, and broadens the image of the University.” Kelton believes that attending musical performances is important to a well-rounded education, and said that auditions for the BCE are open to Suffolk students.

BCE’s first performance featured the music of Mozart. Future performances will include music from the Renaissance to the twentieth century.—Lorene C. Tolin
SOM publishes finance journal

The School of Management is receiving international exposure through its newest visiting professor, Dilip K. Ghosh.

Ghosh teaches capital management and international finance in the Finance Department. He is also the editor of The International Journal of Finance, an academic journal for finance professionals.

The journal, which has a worldwide readership, features articles by finance experts from around the globe on such topics as bank acquisitions and mergers, and global stock market relationships.

Started by Ghosh in 1987 while at Rutgers University, the journal was first published at Suffolk University in spring 1991.

Ghosh is associate editor of Advances in Financial Planning and Analysis and a founding member of the International Trade and Finance Association. He received his master’s in finance degree from the University of Rochester, and his doctorate in international finance from the State University of New York at Buffalo. Ghosh comes to Suffolk after teaching at Rider College, and Temple and Rutgers universities. In November, he presented two papers, “Optimum Choice of an MNC: Location and Investment” and “Investment Strategies of Korea and Japan: A Comparison,” at the Ninth Annual Asian Conference at St. John’s University in New York. His article, “Optimal Capital Structure in a Dynamic Competitive Model,” will be included in Foreign Exchange Issues, Capital Markets and International Banking in the 1990s, to be published by Taylor & Francis in November 1992.

Ghosh is organizing an international conference to be held at Suffolk in May, entitled “Financial Structure, Corporate Management and Attendant Risks in Market Economy.”

The International Journal of Finance is published twice a year at an annual subscription rate of $20 for individuals, and $50 for institutions. Overseas subscribers add $10 per subscription. For more information call 617-573-8754. —Tracy Dixon

Justice Kaplan joins Suffolk Law School

Retired Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) Associate Justice Benjamin Kaplan has been appointed a distinguished professor of law at Suffolk Law School.

Justice Kaplan, who was Royall Professor of Law at Harvard Law School before his appointment to the SJC in 1972, is teaching courses in civil procedure, copyright, and unfair competition. After retiring from the SJC, Kaplan served as recall justice of the Massachusetts Appeals Court.

Kaplan is a graduate of Columbia Law School, where he was editor-in-chief of the Law Review. He practiced law in New York City before joining the Harvard faculty. He was named Royall Professor of Law Emeritus following his appointment to Massachusetts’ highest court, and holds honorary degrees from Suffolk, Harvard and Northeastern universities.

Bellinger to oversee Afro-American literature collection

Robert A. Bellinger, an instructor in the History Department, has been appointed director of the Collection of Afro-American Literature located in Suffolk University’s Sawyer Library.

The collection has more than 4,500 volumes and periodicals, including the complete works of many Black American writers from the 18th century to the present. It was established in 1971, through the joint efforts of Edward H. Clark, professor emeritus in the English Department at Suffolk, and the Museum of Afro-American History, to collect, preserve and catalog works of Black American writers. In 1981, the National Park Service offered its support, forming a union among three separate institutions on Beacon Hill.

The collection consists of novels, poetry, historic journals and science fiction from nearly 1,000 Black writers, including African and Afro-Caribbean writers.

As director, Bellinger will oversee the purchasing of additional materials, the programming of activities, and the coordinating of events in conjunction with the Museum of Afro-American History and the National Park Service.

Bellinger, who teaches courses in Afro-American and U.S. history, succeeds the collection’s previous director, Robert Fox, a former professor in the English Department, who has accepted a position at Southern Illinois University. Bellinger has a bachelor’s degree in psychology from Amherst College and a master’s degree in education from Harvard Graduate School of Education. He has done extensive reading of Afro-American literature and uses materials from the collection to enhance his classes.

An advisor of Suffolk’s Black Student Union, Bellinger said the collection has many uses, including aiding students in their academic development; increasing the information base at Suffolk about the Afro-American experience; and forging stronger links with Suffolk’s neighboring institutions. His immediate focus is to increase awareness about the collection. “The collection is here at Suffolk, and it should be used by students and others who are interested in learning more about Afro-American literature and history,” said Bellinger. —Tracy Dixon
John F. Brennan became the fourth dean of the School of Management on September 1, 1991. In the following interview, he shares his impressions of Suffolk University, his ideas about education, and his plans for the School of Management.

A Conversation with Dean Brennan

Q: What are the key areas you plan to focus on as dean?
A: My many years of experience in industry have proved to me that when customers, their needs and their problems are put first, good things happen, and profits ensue. When you start cutting corners in that direction, or not listening to the marketplace, or to specific customers, things can deteriorate very quickly. I think the same is true in education, where the customers are the students; good things happen when you put the right things first.

My order of priorities is simple: one, the students and their parents, or whoever's paying the bills; two, the faculty, because the best thing you can do for your customers, in this case students, is to provide them with a faculty of excellence so that they are assured a good education; and three, our alumni, friends and other constituencies, not because they're less important, but because they gain automatically by our taking good care of students and our hiring and maintaining an excellent faculty. I believe that if you do a good job with one and two, you will build pride and respect and support among alumni and other constituencies.

Q: You have been visiting classes. What have you been telling students?
A: I believe in getting to know an organization from the inside out. The inside, in the case of the School of Management, is in the classrooms and in the research being performed by the faculty. I've made my interest in visiting classes known to the faculty, and I'm only visiting classes to which I'm invited. My routine depends entirely on the wishes of the faculty member involved. I may be asked to say a few words, or just meet the students, or participate in the class discussions like other students. I recently visited a computer class where I worked along with a student trying to learn a difficult spread-sheet analysis. When I'm asked to speak to students, I discuss with them some of the same themes that I addressed with the trustees and the faculty before accepting this appointment, the image and the quality at Suffolk University. I studied the individual faculty members, research and the curriculum being offered at the School of Management. I was very, very impressed with the quality level, and I try to convey that message to students.
We have the highest level of academic accreditation in the U.S., the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB), and the National Association of Schools of Public Affairs and Administration (NASPAA). Only 15 percent of the approximately 700 management schools in the U.S. have the AACSB accreditation, and very few schools have both. This is something every student, every student’s parents, and certainly every graduate should be aware of. So I stress this point with the students.

I also remind them that the two words on the Suffolk University seal are honestas and diligentia, and tell them that we expect both of Suffolk students and Suffolk alumni. I feel strongly that management is a profession, like medicine and law, and we need to nurture and enforce ethical standards in a far better way.

Q: How do you do that?
A: That’s a tough question. I did it at my last institution by creating a course called “Business, Ethics and Society,” in which I tried to expose students to many real-life situations where moral choices and questionable business practices confronted the people involved. My experience is that students are eager to learn in this area, because many of our former institutions—the church, the Scouts, 4-H, even the family, have not been as active in their lives as was true in previous generations.

It’s easy to say that every class should involve an ethical approach, but I believe that by having specific courses in the curriculum, or specific programs, faculty can bring the high cost of questionable ethical practices dramatically to the attention of every student. Another method of permeating the curriculum with ethical considerations is to hire faculty whose research is active in this area.

Q: Segments of the business community have criticized current business education for being too technical and not keeping up with change. Do you agree?
A: There is no question that the business community is unhappy with business education, principally for the reasons you’ve stated—that what we are teaching is not relevant to everyday business needs. I’m happy to report that this criticism has been so long-standing and so consistent, that our own accreditation agency, the AACSB, is finally changing its attitudes on what is the correct curriculum for business schools. There are dramatic changes under way right now to modify the type of courses in the curriculum and, to some degree, the type of people teaching them.

Q: Are you talking about Suffolk?
A: No, I’m talking about the whole education industry. Part of the complaint and part of the solution is based on an increased emphasis on teaching, as opposed to a previous overemphasis on research and publication by faculty members. Research is very important, but in recent years it has been so crucial in the gaining of tenure, and in the gaining of accreditation by the institution, that it has blocked attention to good teaching qualities in the classroom. It adds a great deal to good teaching to have a professor completely up to date in his or her field, as a result of active research. But, of course, that information must be communicated well if the student (our customer) is to benefit. I hope to encourage the faculty at Suffolk to follow this national trend toward more balance by placing more emphasis on faculty development in the teaching area, and more recognition of excellence in the classroom in awarding tenure. I strongly believe this will be good for the students, good for the faculty, and good for the student’s employer.

Q: Do you foresee any changes in the SOM curriculum?
A: Yes. They are difficult to see this soon, or at least in detail. Our new master’s in finance program has 20 students, which for the first year in operation, and with no promotion, we think is a terrific start. We have just approved a program for certificates in accounting for people who already have a degree or who are changing or upgrading their careers, and we are moving toward a master’s in accounting degree and a master’s in taxation next year. I see our possibly introducing courses or programs in ethics, as mentioned. We will be increasing our emphasis on international courses, and have already adopted an international business major. We have a $120,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Education which is allowing us to bring in, via satellite, international news programs and special business reports in order to further internationalize our curriculum in both undergraduate and graduate programs.

Q: Because of demographic changes in our society, 18-year-olds are no longer the primary source of college students. Who is replacing them, and what programs do they need?
A: For several years the demographics in the country have been leading away from the “traditional” high school graduate toward people who are currently employed or who are without a job or who are at home looking for a second career. Suffolk has been training this kind of student for years, and was founded for this purpose. We are a pioneer in the field of adult learning and continuing education. We have a great variety of ages and backgrounds in all of our programs, and we have long been known for providing effective access to education for those who work in and around the city of Boston.

Q: Are you saying that these demographic changes aren’t affecting the School of Management?
A: No, they are affecting the School. We have had a very substantial increase in what we call nontraditional students—24 years

Law alumni meet dean

Connecticut-area Law School alumni were introduced to Dean Paul R. Sugarman at a September reception in Hartford, Connecticut.

About 30 alumni and guests gathered at the Wadsworth Atheneum to meet the dean and socialize with other alumni. The event was hosted by Suffolk Law School alumnus, Duncan Ross MacKay, JD88.

New York-area Law School alumni and their guests attended a reception at the Tavern on the Green restaurant in New York City on November 7. The reception was co-hosted by Dean Paul R. Sugarman and the Suffolk Law School Association of Metropolitan New York.

Reunion 1991: 50 Years of Suffolk Law School

Law alumni from 1941 to 1986 participated in “Reunion 1991” in October to celebrate more than 50 years of Suffolk history.

The reunion committee, consisting of 51 law alumni, organized the event and established class gifts.
Standing on the top of the world
by Celia L. Puffer, BA42

"The tour company runs a trip there only once a year, in April," I announced to my grown children. "I think I'll go now. Next spring I might be too old."

I've always had the wanderlust, and it is the remote places of the world I enjoy most. And this time, in April 1991, my plan was to go to the North Pole. Since Admiral Robert E. Peary and Matthew Henson reportedly reached the Pole in 1909, fewer than 500 men and women have stood at 90° North—the top of the world.

I realized that weather conditions or other difficulties could prevent such a tour from succeeding, but I knew it would be an adventure anyway. So I booked passage with Arctic Odysseys in Medina, Washington.

"The Arctic is both unpredictable and unforgiving," the tour company warned. "If you think this is analogous to a cookie-cutter tour of Alaska, you had better stay home." They explained that the second week of April, when there are 24 hours of daylight and the snow is still firm, is the ideal time to travel to the Pole. After that the snow becomes too mushy for a plane to land, and there are many open leads [channels].

Our tour group of seven flew by commercial jet from Montreal to Resolute in the Northwest Territories of Canada, where commercial jet service to the North ends. From there we flew on a small chartered twin otter plane, equipped with skis. Our next destination was the Eureka Weather Station on Ellsmere Island, but we made stopovers on the Magnetic North and Cornwallis Island. From Ellsmere we were to try for the Pole.

Forensics Alumni Society formed

Last summer a group of alumni from the undergraduate Forensics Society formed the first Suffolk University Forensics Alumni Society.

Comprised of alumni, faculty and students, the Society's goal is to support continued development of public, intercollegiate, and academic forensics. In September, the Society members held their first event at Suffolk, a performance of an original compiled script about average people entitled, "Heroic Fabrics," which ran for three successive nights.

"The response was very positive and encouraging," said Vicki L. Karns, associate professor in the Communication and Journalism Department and director of the production. Performers included former forensicators, faculty and current students. Plans are under way for next summer's activity.

"A major factor in the success of the Forensics Alumni Society will be our ability to attract and maintain contact with our friends and former forensicators," said Karns. The Society will work with the Alumni Programs Office to attract more alumni volunteers for future projects. For more information about the Forensics Alumni Society, contact Vicki Karns at 617-573-8500 or the Alumni Programs Office at 617-573-8453. — Tracy Dixon
Because the temperatures outside were always well below zero, we had been warned to dress warmly, and in layers. I wore four hats, including a face mask; several sweaters; two pairs of wool socks, and thermal underwear. My camera, in its zippered case, froze several times. Plastic breaks when it freezes, so tour members with eye glasses wrapped band aids around the plastic nose bridges connecting the two lenses.

The runway on Ellsmere Island is bisected by the 80th parallel. From the northern tip of the island north to the Pole and south toward Siberia, there is no land, only the frozen Arctic Ocean. With no land underneath, the ice shifts constantly. Before we departed to the Pole, our pilots made a flight to 86.7° North, where they cached fuel in the ice, so we would have enough to get from there to the Pole, back there for refueling, and then back to Resolute. In the 13 hours that elapsed from the time they first stored the fuel until our return refueling, the cache moved two miles.

On April 11 we took off for an eight-hour round trip flight to the Pole, stopping at 86.7° North to refuel. While we watched the numbers on a dial in the cockpit display our latitude, the pilots maneuvered to get us as close to the Pole as possible. They had to put down in a place with enough fairly smooth snow to allow them to land and to take off. They also couldn’t search and circle too long, because of our limited fuel.

We landed at 89.57° North, about a quarter of a mile from the Pole. The pilots stayed with the plane, kept the motor running, and pointed the way North. Off we tramped.

The temperature was -30°F, but the sky was a cloudless blue. We walked circuitously, avoiding little ridges and icy leads. Several times we stepped into snow above our knees. My face mask became covered with icicles and froze to my cheek.

During our half-hour arduous, bone-chilling trek away from the plane, the ice beneath us had moved a quarter of a mile. When we figured we had set foot on 90° North, we toasted each other with brandy. At that temperature, champagne freezes.

We had made it to the top of the world! The challenge and accomplishment had been worth every shiver, every unsteady step.

Celia (Lothrop) Puffer says of herself: "As a member of the 1942 class of Suffolk's College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, I must be among the earliest and most elderly of Suffolk's graduates." Since graduating, she has been a librarian in Woburn and Malden public libraries, a home teacher in the Woburn school system, and a teaching assistant for special classes in Wakefield. She is a member of the Travelers' Century Club, and before her North Pole trip, had set foot in 120 countries.
Employment specialists stressed the importance of research, self-marketing and interview techniques to the job search process at a seminar held during Career Week in November.

The program, entitled “Job Searching in the 90’s: Strategies and Resources,” was sponsored by Suffolk’s General and MBA/MPA alumni associations and the Office of Career Services and Cooperative Education.

The four panelists included John Kroen, MBA81, section head of the employment, training and communications skills development center at the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston; Robert Taub, Exec.MBA88, executive vice-president of The Executive Career Resource Group in Wellesley, Massachusetts; George Zeller, director of placement of the Jewish Vocational Service in Boston; and the moderator, Lisa Vigiotta, BA89, benefits assistant in the Human Resources Office at Suffolk University, and a director of the General Alumni Association.

“Make sure that your resume is the most professional document you have ever written,” advised Kroen. “This is what is going to attract you to a company.”

“After you have done some self-assessment in putting together your resume, it is time to start doing some research,” said Zeller. He advised the audience to use the resources available at college and public libraries, bookstores, and nonprofit agencies.

Kroen told potential candidates to maintain eye contact during an interview and to ask questions. “This shows that you are interested in the position and care about what you are involving yourself in,” he said.

The key to applying for a position is being able to market yourself well, added Taub. “Talk about your values and ethics. Tell the interviewer, ‘This is what I can do for your company.’”

The panelists recommended networking as an important tool in getting that first interview. “Volunteer somewhere,” said Zeller. “This is a way to meet people and find out about available positions in a particular field.”

The program concluded with a discussion of services offered by Suffolk University’s Office of Career Services and Cooperative Education, including the Alumni Career Advisory Network.—Tracy Dixon old and above—in all of our programs, particularly in our MBA, MPA and Executive MBA programs. And the new master’s in finance and accounting certificate programs are specifically aimed at educating such students.

One of the most exciting areas in nontraditional education at Suffolk is our excellent Center for Management Development at One Beacon Street. In this executive environment, we provide professional training for U.S. and international executives. Recently groups of Soviet bankers visited the center to learn about U.S. banking and financial systems. The center also offers regular courses on computer usage, human relations, and a host of other topics exclusively for working professionals. The center is also an excellent resource for Suffolk alumni, many of whom have attended our management programs or have sponsored their own educational activities there.

Adult learning is the fastest growing segment of the education industry, and Suffolk has to continue to pursue this activity vigorously.

Q: Ninety percent of today’s work force will still be working in the year 2000. Will they need new skills by that time? If so, what will they be?
A: The speed of technological development is making what we learn in school obsolete. This is the principal reason why people need continuing education. They also need to repackage themselves for the average of four careers today’s new graduate can expect to pursue in one lifetime. Providing those skills is the job of continuing or adult education.

Q: Where do you see the School of Management in five years?
A: While demographics, competitors, financial environment, students’ demands and employers’ demands all change, Suffolk University and the School of Management cannot afford to stand still. What worked in 1906, 55 years ago, or even ten years ago, is not necessarily what works today. My analysis of Suffolk and its environment leaves me concerned about two areas. The first is location. This has long been Suffolk’s strong suit—but much about the central city has changed. Manufacturing and its employees and executives have largely departed to the suburbs—or farther. The relocation or “branching out” of our educational competitors testifies to this change. Secondly, my marketing and management background makes me wonder how long Suffolk can survive dealing only with that small niche of students who choose or are limited to a nonresidential institution. The great bulk of the college market seeks a residential college experience. When times are good, this reality leaves Suffolk with a smaller and smaller market, one which requires more and more sensitive niching—keeping access up, prices down, schedules flexible. If you believe the concept I espouse, putting customers first, you should consider providing education where the customers want it, and in the environment they choose.

Should we at Suffolk consider “branching out” to where many of our former students (and competitors) have gone? Should we also consider enlarging our scope in the market by attracting the largest segment of the market—residential students? I think that how we address these two questions will have a lot to do with where we will be five or ten years from now.—Patricia M. Walsh

Todd Glickman: The weather’s his business

Curious about the weather?
Ask Todd Glickman. Weather is his business.

Every Sunday morning, as broadcast meteorologist for Weather Services Corporation in Bedford, Massachusetts, Glickman prepares recorded weather forecasts for more than 50 radio stations from San Juan, Puerto Rico, to Los Angeles, California. He also gives live reports on Boston’s WRKO-AM radio. In between all of this, he sketches out the central graphic for USA Today’s Monday weather page.

During the week, Glickman, MBA88, oversees government contracts and marketing for WSI Corporation in Billerica, Massachusetts, a national private weather information company. WSI Corporation gets raw data from the National Weather Service via satellite which, Glickman explained, is then tailored for use by clients such as CBS, CNN and NBC.

Glickman, who has an SB degree in meteorology from MIT, said that, contrary to popular belief, blizzards and hurricanes are not the most difficult weather conditions to forecast, or even of most interest to listeners. People are interested in their local forecast, by which they plan their day, he said, and are less interested in major storms which may not affect their area. “The real challenge is in predicting how much snow will fall in a metropolitan area during the commuter rush hours, or the timing of a snowstorm on a summer holiday weekend,” he said.

One problem weather forecasters often face, Glickman said, is giving weather advisories that affect the tourist industry. “For example, if the roads are icy from Boston to New Hampshire, and I warn people that the driving is dangerous,” he said, “we may get a call from a ski resort complaining that we are keeping people from going there. But, my first obligation is to report conditions that could affect public safety.”

One of Glickman’s hobbies is radio. He is president of Technology Broadcasting Corporation, the board of directors of MIT’s WMFR-FM radio, and serves as its advisor. He is also a train buff, and a few days a month is a volunteer trolley driver at the Seashore Trolley Museum in Kennebunkport, Maine. Being on radio provides Glickman some anonymity. Once when an unsuspecting stranger in a supermarket complained to him about his forecast, Glickman identified himself to the shopper, and gave him the correct version of his forecast—on the spot.—Lorene C. Dear Friends:

This Donors Report contains the names of more than 6,000 philanthropic investors in Suffolk University. Students, faculty and staff know that their confidence in Suffolk is well placed and are appreciative of their support.

While many of our sister institutions are experiencing declining enrollments, the enrollment for Suffolk’s College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and School of Management has had steady growth in each of the last six semesters, and the Law School is receiving a record number of applications. I believe that this is directly attributable to our steadfast commitment to providing education of high quality, aggressive recruiting of new students and individualized attention to the retention of those enrolled.

In addition, the Law School has one of the highest academically qualified student bodies in its history. Students come from all areas of the country and alumni reside and practice in every state. Not surprisingly, the Law School continues to earn national recognition.

In the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, and the School of Management, undergraduate programs continue to be the heart of our educational mission. Complementing that vital organ at the graduate level are existing programs such as the Master in Business Administration and Master in Public Administration.

New initiatives recently undertaken include the Master’s degree in Communication in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences; and the Master of Science degrees in the fields of Finance, Accounting, and Taxes in the School of Management — the only school in New England fully-accredited to award both the M.B.A. and M.P.A. degrees. These offerings are well-subscribed, confirming our belief that the University should play an expanded role in graduate and specialized education.

We have also taken several significant steps in the international field, notably through our Center for Management Development, our affiliation with the Center for International Studies in Madrid, and our agreements with Charles University and Czech Technical University, both in Prague. These affiliations provide well-received educational exchange opportunities for both students and faculty alike.

As anyone privileged to receive one knows, a good education lasts a lifetime. The philanthropic investors recognized in the following pages are helping to make such an opportunity available to today’s 6,000 students. The “dividends” to be earned are summarized by Benjamin Franklin, who said: “An investment in knowledge always pays the best interest.”

Thank you again for your continuing support, and please accept my best wishes.

Other Ways of Giving

There are other ways to support Suffolk University and its mission of providing quality education.

Gifts-in-Kind: These include libraries, art works, real estate, or other items which can be retained or sold for the benefit of the University. Prospective donors of gifts-in-kind should first confer with the Director of Development regarding the usefulness and appropriateness of the intended gift.

Memorial Gifts: Family or friends can make memorial gifts to remember members of the Suffolk community or honor loved ones in a special way.

Bequests: Alumni and friends may leave Suffolk University an outright bequest or proportional share of assets. Bequests allow alumni to provide a more substantial gift for a specific purpose that interests them.

Endowed Gifts: An endowed gift is permanently invested by the University to assure annual income. These gifts can be used for scholarships, named funds, academic prizes, professorships or lectureships. Endowed gifts may be made with outright or planned gifts, such as a bequest. An endowed fund will perpetuate one’s relationship to the University or it can honor the memory of another and give the personal satisfaction of creating a new resource for Suffolk University.

All inquiries should be directed to the Office of Institutional Advancement (617-573-8452). Gifts of securities should be sent by registered mail to Francis X. Flannery, Vice President/Treasurer, Suffolk University, 8 Ashburton Place, Boston, MA 02108-2770.
