NO PINK CARNATIONS HERE

We've all heard the great deal about 'victory' - a word that is aggrandized to such an extent that it seems to mean everything and nothing at all. It is a word that is put in a such context, and I believe that the word 'victory' is what we had set.

Now more than ever is the need to stop and think of the meaning of 'victory'. It is a word that is often used in a political context.

From the Smithson III, it is clear that the word 'victory' is a word that is often used in a political context.

AN NEIGHBORHOOD BARRIERS REMOVED

Almost 80 per cent of the men in one large factory go to the same barber shop near the plant. It was a social and economic barrier which was removed when the company arranged for a barbershop on the plant grounds.

The men, for years, would go to the same shop near the plant and would take the same seats. One man would sit at the corner of the counter, another on the next seat, and so on. But now they go to the plant barber shop and are seated at random by the barber.

At first, some of the men objected to this change. They said they couldn't bear to have the new barber cut their hair. But the company explained that the new shop was better equipped and that the barbers were trained. In time, the men were satisfied and went. They soon found that they liked the new barber, and that the service was better.

The company also provided a lunch room where men could eat lunch. This was also a social barrier which was removed. The men had always eaten lunch in the factory, but now they could go to the lunch room and eat lunch with their friends.
