MOVIE SLANTS

By Lute Osp

Camel's new advertising campaign, known as "The Lesson of the Camel," rated an enthusiastic response from movie patrons in the Suffolk area. The campaign took advantage of the recent freeze and the resultant icicles which clung to the windows of the movie theaters. A series of humorous scenes were created where icicles were made to look like cacti, and the camel was seen to be herding them along the streets.

The campaign was well received by the movie-going public, who found the scenes amusing and entertaining. The Grant, the Palace, the Academy, and the Strand all showed the campaign, and the results were impressive. The Grant reported an increase of 25% in afternoon business, the Palace an increase of 30%, and the Academy a 20% increase. The Strand, however, did not fare as well, and showed a decrease of 10% in afternoon business.

The success of the campaign was due in part to the creative use of icicles, which were seen throughout the Suffolk area. The icicles were not only used in the movie theater windows, but also in the streets, where they were seen to be "herding" icicles along the sidewalks.

The campaign was a success, and Camel is expected to continue using icicles in its advertising for the next few months.
