EDITOR'S NOTE

To the Reader:

The Suffolk Journal of Trial and Appellate Advocacy is the product of the Suffolk University Law School Moot Court Board's commitment to providing the New England legal community with practical and in-depth analysis of current legal issues. In Volume III, we have expanded the scope of the Journal beyond strictly courtroom issues. The articles in this volume address a variety of issues relevant to the practicing attorney. The Editorial Board hopes that you the reader will find the articles not only engaging but useful in your practice.

As Editor-in-Chief of Volume III I have been fortunate to have worked with a very motivated and capable Editorial Board and Staff. The production of Volume III of the Suffolk Journal of Trial and Appellate Advocacy is the result of an all inclusive team effort. I want to take this opportunity to thank each author, staff editor and Editorial Board member for their commitment to the Journal. Without their talents and dedication, this Journal could not be produced. I especially want to thank Patrick McGrath, for his Herculean efforts in the final days of production.

The Editors would like to thank Dean John Fenton, Jr., the Associate Deans, the Journal Faculty Committee, the faculty, and the entire administrative staff of Suffolk University Law School for their support, constructive criticism, and direct assistance in producing this volume. I would especially like to thank our faculty advisor Professor Richard Pizzano for his encouragement throughout the process.
