LEGALLY SPEAKING

By ED. MASTERMAN

It has long been the policy of several large tobacco companies to use their respective names in such a manner that all advertisements promoting a particular brand bear a similarity in design, color, and general appearance. This policy was recently upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States in a case involving a suit brought by a manufacturer against another manufacturer for infringement of its trademark. The court held that the use of similar trademarks by competing companies is an unlawful practice and that such use is likely to cause confusion among consumers.
