MODERN DANCE TEAM PERFORMS AT SUFFOLK

The modern dance team brought a breath of change to the old-fashioned schools. The team, which was a group of students from the Suffolk College Drama Department, performed a variety of dances that were both traditional and contemporary.

Paper Seeks Stuff

"We need help," the newspaper editor announced. "We need more subscriptions!"

The editor was referring to the fact that the newspaper had not met its subscription goals for the year. The paper was relying on subscriptions to fund its operations, and the editor was concerned about the future of the newspaper if it did not meet its goals.

Nominations Sought for Recognition Day

200 Attend Varsity Dance

The annual Recognition Day at Suffolk College was held on the evening of March 17. The dance was held in the gymnasium, and it was open to all students. The dance was a great success, with over 200 students in attendance.

Dance Returns to Suffolk
In Unity There Is Strength

In the Letters to the Editors column found on this page is a letter that deserves the careful consideration of every member of the University.

To the Editor:

In the long history of its existence again a problem has been present, since every year of the editorial board has been a student at Suffolk University. However, the Law School situation is only a part of a situation which exists at Suffolk, it is found on many college campuses and over the country.

At times, this situation has developed to the point where representatives of the Law School have asked for separate Law School yearbooks, thus indicating an unhealthy situation that must be eradicated in the near future.

Departmental pride must be sacrificed to University pride, if Suffolk is to take its place in the creation of a solid foundation where every department of the University will pull together.

Starting with this issue, the Rambler will print a column devoted to outstanding Suffolk Alumni. We would like to have this thought with you.

These men and women are not judged by the outside world as representatives of Suffolk College of Liberal Arts, Suffolk Law School, or Suffolk College of Journalism, but rather they are judged as representatives of Suffolk University.

What Degree?

Not so long ago, the grandest words that anyone could utter were, "I am an American." The times have changed and with them the standards for judging citizenship, whether it be the citizenship of the college students like ourselves or of the students in the world's colleges. This war has brought to each of us the realization that there are occasions when our fellow New Yorkers and also our fellow countrymen are in danger and that more of us must do something to further our war effort. Were we good Americans?

Today, we must be second degree Americans. Second degree Americans are better. Americans who do without the luxuries so that they may put more money into Government bonds and stamps, conserve a bit more than is absolutely necessary, and on the whole, do their share in our present war effort. Are we better Americans? Second degree Americans.

Tomorrow, we will have to be first degree Americans. First degree Americans are Americans who are the very best possible. They are those who give the luxurious life and even the necessities. They conserve, give up, do blood, service, and never cease working. They know no sacrifice. They give of their best knowledge and power. They possess 'the duties' that new students teach 'and press on to further goals.' They do not just share their best but give more and more for our present war effort. Will we be the 'best Americans? First degree Americans?"

Yale Professor Criticizes Low Law School Standards

Yale law professor, recently appointed by the Connecticut bar to investigate the matter, has criticized the low law school standards of several of the nation's top law schools. In a recent speech, the professor accused these schools of maintaining standards that are too low for the quality of students they attract.

The issue of law school standards has been a matter of controversy for some time. Many law schools, especially those in the eastern United States, have been criticized for maintaining standards that are too low for the quality of students they attract. The professor's speech has added to this controversy, raising questions about the future of legal education in the United States.

The professor's speech has also sparked a debate among legal educators and policymakers. Some have called for a review of the standards maintained by law schools, while others have argued that the current standards are necessary to attract a diverse range of students.

In conclusion, the issue of law school standards remains a matter of concern for many in the legal community. The professor's speech has added to this debate, raising questions about the future of legal education in the United States.
SANDEE LYDON: "SWEETHEART"
THANKS UNIVERSITY FOR HONOR

Sandee Lydon, a freshman in the 1970s, received the University's "Sweheart" award in her senior year.

Sandee was one of the poster children of the mother of my daughter. She was the kind of girl that everyone admired. She was always smiling and had a way of making you feel good.

One day she showed up at my house and said, "Hey, what's up?"

I told her about the People's Pet of the Month Contest and she said, "Oh, that's cool. I've heard about that before."

She went on to tell me all about her project and how she had been helping the local animal shelter. She had been volunteering every Saturday for the past year and had raised over $1,000 for the shelter.

I was so proud of her. She was doing such a great job and I knew that she was going to win the contest.

But I was wrong.

She didn't win.

But she didn't care. She was just happy to be helping the animals.

She lived a simple life and was content with what she had. She was a true sweetheart.
