Drake states in his preface: "Where people congregate for any good purpose they sing, and forum audiences, above all, should voice their fine ideals in song."

Nothing has been more conducive to the good nature and to the smooth running of Ford Hall than the community singing indulged in immediately after the speaker has finished his lecture. Before the intermission begins, the audience is requested to rise, a chosen song is indicated, and then there follows relaxation in song, unless your neighbor possesses the same sort of voice as yours.
