We’re Celebrating

In 1981, Suffolk University will celebrate its 75th anniversary as an academic institution. From its beginning in 1906 when Gleason Archer founded the Law School and held evening classes for a handful of men in his Roxbury home, the school has grown steadily in size and influence, adding a College of Liberal Arts in 1934 and in 1937 a College of Business Administration. In 1937 the school was incorporated as Suffolk University. Today the University serves the needs of 6,500 students who attend classes on a full or part-time basis.

But no university can rest on its accomplishments. Education involves teaching, but also learning, pursuing and perfecting knowledge. These disciplines belong to the present and to the future, not to the past. Suffolk University celebrates its past and honors those responsible for our success. But we equally celebrate the opportunity to build on our foundation, to grow, and to provide superior education in the years ahead.

To make possible this celebration of past and future, an organizing committee co-chaired by President Thomas Fulham and Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Vincent Fulmer selected persons from all areas of the University community as members of the SUFFOLK UNIVERSITY 75 committee. Chaired by Trustee Lawrence L. Cameron, the Committee is coordinating a series of events beginning in September, 1980 and continuing throughout the University’s birthday year. All members of the University community — students, faculty, alumni, trustees, parents, administrators, friends — are included in anniversary activities. The SUFFOLK UNIVERSITY 75 Committee invites everyone to join in honoring the University’s diamond jubilee year. □

At 11:00 a.m. on Friday, August 1, Vincent A. Fulmer, chairman of the Suffolk University Board of Trustees, stepped to the podium in the Archer auditorium to address the all-University gathering assembled there.

"The nation-wide search for Suffolk University's president is over," he announced. "On Thursday evening, July 31, the trustees elected Dr. Daniel H. Perlman seventh president of Suffolk University."

The man chosen to succeed was to that moment unknown to the University community. His candidacy was one of the best kept secrets on campus. But, assured Chairman Fulmer, "his incisive qualities of mind and his uncompromising sense of the first-rate led to his unanimous election by the trustees."

Dr. Perlman comes to Suffolk University from Roosevelt University in Chicago where he was vice president for administration. He is a highly respected academic administrator with a background in urban higher education that spans two decades. At age 45, he is the youngest to serve as a Suffolk University president. His selection is the result of a painstakingly thorough search.

When President Fulham announced his retirement in October, many throughout the University felt that the process of selecting the next president must include input from all constituencies of the University community. To accommodate this quite reasonable request, the Board of Trustees established a presidential search committee.

In establishing for the first time this committee with representatives from all major constituencies — trustees, faculty, alumni, and students — the board made an historic decision. This break with tradition was an expression of confidence in the concept of shared decision making and was a clear sign of institutional maturity. The decision required both courage and faith, for the selection of a new president is generally viewed as the single most important act that the Board of Trustees is called upon to make.

The presidential search committee was composed of two students, three alumni, six faculty members, five trustees, and a trustee from the board serving on a rotating basis. It was chaired by Dr. Joseph H. Strain, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

The committee was charged with an enormous task, find a minimum of three and a maximum of five of the best candidates in the entire nation for the position of president. They were also directed to examine the structure of the executive office and the criteria to be used in the selection process.

In order to develop a pool of candidates, the committee advertised nationally in newspapers and professional journals and sent hundreds of letters to professional, women's and minority associations, foundation heads, and university presidents, vice presidents, and deans. They interviewed key administrators and deans concerning institutional goals, needs,
They held 26 meetings where members pored through more than 1400 pages of dossiers on approximately 150 candidates and eventually interviewed those candidates selected. The committee began its work in January and presented the final group of candidates to the Board of Trustees for their consideration on May 1.

Who is the man who survived the scrutiny of both the trustees and the search committee?

Like Suffolk University, Roosevelt University is a private urban institution. Its student body of 6800 is drawn largely from commuter students in greater Chicago. Its moderate tuition levels approximate Suffolk University's.

During his tenure at Roosevelt University, Dr. Perlman served as director of government relations and long range planning, professor of education, secretary to the Board of Trustees, dean of administration, and finally vice president for administration.

In 1974 he was the recipient of a scholarship to the Harvard University Institute for Educational Management. The following summer he received a Fulbright-Hayes Lectureship to teach university management in the Philippines. In 1977-78, as a presidential exchange executive, Dr. Perlman served as a special assistant, United States Office of Education, Washington, D.C.

Soft spoken and unassuming, Dr. Perlman's manner belies his accomplishments. Of his years at Roosevelt University he says, "I would like to be remembered as someone who cared about the quality of the interaction of the people at the institution. That interaction is of the utmost importance, it seems to me. If there is a quality of mutual support, of trust, of building together toward the mission of the institution then I think the institution will flourish. I would like to think that I've made a contribution, however small, toward that end at Roosevelt University."

Perlman has travelled extensively both in the United States and overseas. "I think I've seen a fair share of the world and have a good basis on which to judge the city of Boston and Suffolk University."

And what is his judgement? "Well, I think Boston is one of the most exciting cities in the country. "One of the reasons for this excitement is, I believe, the presence of so many distinguished academic institutions that attract to this area an outstanding group of both faculty and students." But he adds, "This abundance creates an environment in which some institutions are in competition with others for students. Institutions here may face challenges that others in smaller communities would not necessarily face."

"I think Suffolk University has a strong base and has an opportunity to be an exemplary institution of its type and to play an important role here in Boston."

As we move into the eighties the competition for students both nationally and in the Boston area will become keener as enrollments decline. Some institutions may not survive this student decrease. Will Suffolk University withstand it?

"Oh, I think there is no question about it. Suffolk University will survive. The issue is not survival. The issue is the type and quality of institution that will emerge during the eighties. I think that Suffolk University has a strong base and has an opportunity to be an exemplary institution of its type and to play an important role here is Boston."

"In the past, many colleges and universities focused their attentions on full-time students who came directly from high school. Adult or evening students were not always made to feel comfortable. Over a long period, Suffolk University has developed a role of serving those adult students who attend classes part-time or during the evening as well as students who attend full-time. Now, institutions that formally disdained adult students are realizing that they need to cultivate that kind of clientele. The competition..."
is increasing, but I think that the tradition that Suffolk has had will continue to make students feel comfortable at this institution.”

Dr. Perlman gives evidence of the same eagerness to pursue problems at Suffolk University that was his hallmark at Roosevelt University. An attentive listener, he has been meeting with University personnel and has read quantities of material in an effort to gain an understanding of what the school’s needs are.

“I have read through the annual reports of the deans and department chairmen and I have a sense of their concerns about the needs of the institution.

“One of the critical needs that is expressed is the need for additional space. I’m pleased that the board has developed the Campaign for Excellence which will, with the completion of the Ashburton Place Building, make possible additional space. This will help to a significant degree, though it will not completely alleviate our space problem, to be sure.”

Dr. Perlman comes to Suffolk University on the eve of its 75th anniversary. “I’m looking forward to the anniversary celebration both because that kind of activity is fun and because it marks an important milestone,” he says.

Dr. Perlman is married to the former Suzanne Meyer. They have two children, Julia, age 11 and David, age 8. Mrs. Perlman holds a Ph.D. from Northwestern University and has been a member of the faculty at that University in the department of communicative disorders. She has supervised a diagnostic clinic there for school-aged children who are referred with learning disabilities. She will be moving to Boston and expects to find an appropriate position in her field here.

“One of the problems of dual career families is that there is often some sacrifice by one partner in the marriage to enable the other partner to pursue a special opportunity,” Perlman points out. “My wife has been willing to make that sacrifice for me and I am most grateful.” Then he adds firmly, “But with the understanding that it involves not the termination of her career by any means, but rather a change in position.”

The Perlmans enjoy camping together as a family and are looking forward to visiting the many camping areas in New England that are within striking distance of Boston.

In addition, with the heavy snowfall in the Chicago area during the past several years, the Perlmans have done their share of cross country skiing, and are looking forward to skiing together in New England this winter. He adds quickly that a moderate amount of snowfall will suffice, however. “I’m certainly not anticipating another Blizzard of ’78!” he laughs.

Once the Perlmans are settled into their new home, Perlman expects that they will make the most of the opportunities in the city. “Our children have visited Boston before. My son especially remembers the Aquarium and is looking forward to visiting that facility more frequently. They both also remember the Children’s Museum with great fondness and I’m looking forward to the chance to take them to the Science Museum and to other resources in the city.”

The period of the 1980’s will be a period of challenge for all areas of education. Daniel Perlman comes to the University as it begins this crucial decade. He is enthusiastic about the challenge. “I feel very good about coming to Suffolk University and very excited about its future.”
To celebrate our 75th anniversary, the SUFFOLK UNIVERSITY 75 committee has planned a series of activities (see Schedule of Events for details).

The Alumni Bulletin will join in honoring the University with a series of features about the school and its heritage. Dr. Richard Preiss, assistant professor of journalism, will serve as editor for the series. For his first article, Dr. Preiss looks back at the University through the eyes of Dean Joseph H. Strain who has been associated with Suffolk University for over forty years.

Dean Strain remembers

Blackouts, buckets, and the bullpen

By Richard Preiss

Do you remember dancing in the library... blackouts... air raid drills... when evening students were required to be on campus five nights a week... or how the debating society was named?

These are just some of the memories that came to mind when Associate Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, Joseph H. Strain, paused recently to recall some of his fondest recollections of earlier days on Beacon Hill.

Dean Strain, who has been a fixture on the Suffolk scene since 1938, with the exception of two breaks for service as a marine corps pilot, has served under all seven of Suffolk University's presidents. He was the chairman of the 18-member presidential search committee that played a major role in the process that culminated in the selection of Dr. Daniel H. Perlman as Suffolk's seventh President.

"I enrolled at Suffolk University because at that time it was the only university in Boston where you could earn a bachelor's degree at night. I was working in a restaurant then and could only attend night classes, though later, I worked nights and attended days."

Few students can say that they were admitted by the University president, but that's the good fortune that came Strain's way 42 years ago.

"I met Gleason Archer the day I applied. Carolla Bryant, who functioned as registrar then, showed me into Archer's office. It was located on the second floor of the building that later became the Archer Building. The entire second floor on the Temple Street side was just one big office with glass partitions. President Archer radiated warmth and confidence. He told me that he had worked his way through college, and that if he could do it, I could. All that was necessary was determination and hard work. His encouraging words and the 'witness effect' of his example powerfully influenced my morale."

In a way, today's evening students have it easy — most are on campus only one or two nights a week for classes. But in Strain's undergraduate days all evening students were required to attend four or five nights a week. Classes met on Monday and Thursday, or Tuesday and Friday nights, while Wednesday nights were set aside for labs.

And while the taking of attendance is optional in classes today, it was a mandatory procedure back then.

"You were issued a book of tickets for admission to classes and there were student monitors in each class. They received a quarter-tuition scholarship for taking attendance. They'd collect the tickets, put them in an envelope and take them to the main office, where they'd be pasted on a master sheet. You had to be there when class started. If you arrived late, you couldn't get in and would be marked absent."

The center of daily student life outside of classes was the recreation room which was located in the 20 Derne Street Building, occupying the present site of the Communications and Speech Department. The room was quite large and was equipped with ping pong tables. "We also played catch on the roof with tennis balls until some of the neighbors complained about balls landing on the sidewalk."
But believe it or not, the major student social functions were held in the library. Strain recalled that occasionally dances would be held there, with the annual masquerade ball being the highlight of the year.

“We'd just push back the tables and chairs and we'd have a ballroom,” recalled Strain.

Dean Strain’s regimen of employment, classes, and homework left little time for anything else — including sleep — a routine that is still all too familiar to many of today’s students.

“After I was transferred to the night shift, I would work at the restaurant 10 to 12 hours a night, sleep from 3:30 a.m. until 7:00 a.m., go to class at 9:00 a.m., study in the afternoon, and then start work at 5:00 p.m. During one final exam week, I didn't sleep at all for seven days and nights. I took smelling salts with me to the exams and took a sniff if I felt myself about to doze off.”

After working for two years in the restaurant, Strain held an on-campus position. He was a student service staff employee and did everything from chipping scale inside the boilers to assisting in the library. He was also a student air raid warden.

“During World War II there were heavy curtains on the windows for blackout purposes. We'd pull them down at night. All the corridor windows were boarded up. Every so often, we'd have an air raid drill. When the sirens wailed, everyone went to the auditorium, but I was a warden and my post was on the roof with a shovel and a bucket of sand. I was supposed to watch for incendiary bombs, but all I ever saw was an eerie view of Boston without any lights.

“I also remember that every Christmas President Archer would have all the employees, even the student assistants, line up in his office and would then go down the line, shaking hands and giving each person his or her Christmas bonus individually.”

Strain recalls, with a bit of wistfulness, the days when Suffolk was a much smaller, more tightly-knit community.

“There were only 13 students in my graduating class (1943) and we all knew one another. In my senior year, I attended both Suffolk University and Boston University in order to finish in January and take navy flight training. Gleason Archer awarded me my diploma. I was the only mid-year college graduate.”

After service in World War II, Strain joined the English Department faculty while attending Boston College Graduate School, where he earned his M.A. He later attended Harvard University where he earned his C.A.G.S. and Ed.D. in educational administration.

Strain recalled his early days on the faculty when all the professors knew one another well.

“There was a room in what is now the Archer Building called the bullpen. Every faculty member had a desk and chair there. It was where faculty members held office hours and met with students. It was cramped, but because the faculty were all in the same room, they got to know one another quite well. As Suffolk has expanded over the years, some of the feeling of community has been lost. That’s a negative aspect of growth.”

And then there was the time that the debating society needed funds to make an out-of-state trip. Strain, vice president in his student days, was now the coach. “Jack Stanton, the society’s president, hit upon the idea of naming the society after Walter M. Burse, the University’s president at that time. Jack figured he could tap Burse for additional funds. Although I suggested that it would be more appropriate to name the society after someone who was retired or deceased, President Burse thought Jack’s idea was great.”

"He was really very happy and flattered. Then Jack put the point to him about needing funds for the trip. He could hardly refuse. The society got its money and went on the trip, and it had a new name."

It was Strain's idea to have the 1962 commencement at the Hatch Shell on the Esplanade.

"I thought we should have it outside so that more people could see it. I thought we'd also get more attention from the media. But on commencement day, the robing area in the Shell was flooded from a plumbing leak and everyone had to stand on planks to dress. During the ceremony, the public address system would pick up extraneous sounds — such as horns from passing cars. We also had to have a backup location (Suffolk's auditorium) in case it rained (it didn't). President Fulham decided that commencement at the Hatch Shell wasn't one of my better ideas, and we haven't tried it again."

As a former evening student, Strain has a special feeling for those enrolled in night classes and has spent much of his career at Suffolk University improving the evening division. He was in charge of the evening division from 1956 to 1972 and was instrumental in establishing the Evening Division Student Association (EDSA) and in securing funds for the publication of the Suffolk Evening Shadow (now the Evening Voice), the only evening student newspaper in the state.

"I have three roles at Suffolk University," Strain says, "I'm a troubleshooter, to do whatever has to be done; then an innovator, to suggest new ideas; and finally a catalyst or facilitator. I try to find people who are interested in something and see if I can make it possible for them to do it. Serving as chairman of the presidential search committee was one of my most interesting and rewarding experiences."

Judging by any standard you choose, a lot has been accomplished by the freshman who had that "little talk" about success with Gleason Archer some 42 years ago. □
Marine program aboard tall ship
Down east under sail
By Edward Bander and Marjorie Kelleher

At noon on Saturday, July 19, amid T.V. cameras, reporters, and waving relatives, fifteen members of the Suffolk University community, including alumni, left Boston aboard the r/v Regina Maris, 144-foot barquentine and America's only square-rigged research vessel, bound for the University's Robert S. Friedman Laboratory near Eastport, Maine. The nine-day working cruise which would conduct scientific experiments was organized by Dr. Arthur West, chairman of the Suffolk University biology department, and the alumni development office, and with the cooperation of the U.S. National Marine Fisheries Service and the Ocean Research and Education Society, Incorporated.

Among those on board were Edward Bander, Suffolk University law librarian and author of the forthcoming book, Mr. Dooley and Mr. Dunne, and Marjorie Kelleher EdM '79, Suffolk University grants officer. They look back at their trip in the following article.

What is it like to sail a tall ship? On a hot Saturday in July a hardy band of Suffolk University landlubbers left the comforts of shore and set sail aboard the r/v Regina Maris to find out.

Ours was not a leisure trip. The byword was work, and work we did. But those on board came away with the feeling that, as the dictum says, work is work when you are paid to do it and pleasure when you pay to do it.

The trip from Boston's Central Wharf to Cobscook Bay near Eastport, Maine took three days, as did our return from Eastport to Boston. The stopover in Maine constituted the rest of the time.

During our time at sea the "crew" were each assigned a watch—fore, main, or mizzen, as part of our job. Each of the watches operated on a 24-hour rotating schedule. What did this mean? For one thing it meant the possibility of getting up from a warm bed at 2 a.m. and climbing up on deck into the cool foggy darkness. It also meant standing the forward watch and calling out "freighter at 15° off starboard," as Ann Hospelhorn, BS 79, did or cranking the foghorn every two minutes as a Maine mist enveloped the ship.

Standing watch also meant that you might sight a humpback whale as did Bob Looby, BSB '58, of Florida. His son, Bob Jr., was along on the trip and could sometimes be found furling the sails as he worked his way perilously along the yard, standing on a swinging cable at vertigo distance above the deck.

When not on watch, many of the novice crew slept as much as we could for the first day or so of the trip. This seemed to help ease stomachs threatened by sea sickness. Fortunately the ocean was calm and almost no one was bothered with this for long.
During their three days in Maine, the Suffolk University group continued their research. Examining a marine specimen collected at Cobscook Bay are: (L-R) Don Mikes, Director of I.M.C.; Sal Testeverde, EdM'75; Ann Hospelhorn, BS'79; Bernard Snow; Donald Ouellette, BS'76, Cobscook Bay Laboratory instructor; and Marge Kelleher, EdM'79.

Appetites paled by the ship's rolling were usually awakened by the ocean air and prodded back to life by the ship's excellent cook. This lady produced fresh bread or pastry each day and prepared tasty menus featuring lasagna, beef stroganoff, or homemade pizza for supper each evening. Each day one of the crew members served as her "galley slave". This meant paring potatoes, scrubbing pans, and washing dishes (in salt water heated on the ship's stove).

Eating quarters on the ship doubled as sleeping quarters. Those of us accustomed to king-size beds had some adjustments to make. The built-in bunks were about six feet long and two feet wide with only about three feet of head room (which made dressing and undressing a contortionist's delight). Red curtains pulled across the side for privacy and each bunk was equipped with an overhead light for reading.

Social gatherings aboard the Regina Maris? They were almost non-existent. When it was dark those who could went to bed. When you knew you'd be awakened at 2 a.m. or 6 a.m., who on board wanted to socialize long into the night? And besides, festivities would have been carried on in the "dry" state as all wine and spirits had been sequestered in the captain's cupboard for the duration of the ship's voyage.

The purpose of the trip was, of course, to carry out scientific experimentation. During our three days enroute to Eastport and later during our three day return to Boston, the scientists aboard the ship and their Suffolk University crew conducted research using the ship's extensive and sophisticated equipment. Included were surface water temperature, location, and XBT readings, analyses for red tide presence, and additional tests to collect data on the physical conditions of the ocean.

Plankton and other marine life were collected for evaluation. Scientists interested in the study of marine mammals observed the activities of whales during the trip. Mr. Sal Testaverde EdM '75, National Marine Fisheries Service scientist, and Dr. Beatrice Snow, AB '62, Suffolk University professor of biology, were aboard as our seminar faculty for the cruise.

On Tuesday, July 22, we anchored in Eastport. All on board motored to shore in an inflatable raft. Then it was on to the University's Friedman Laboratory in Edmunds and, yes, the showers; our first since Boston.

During our three days in Maine, we continued our research. "The onshore research was an extension of what the group did at sea," commented Dr. Arthur West.

But there was also time to tour the area. We visited Campobello Island and toured the Roosevelt Cottage and Park which has been preserved as it was during F.D.R.'s lifetime. We visited a sardine cannery in Lubec and a boat building school in Eastport. We saw bald eagles, a nesting rock for hundreds of cormorants, and dozens of seals sunning themselves. We consumed local specialties including Maine lobster, clams, and a lesser known delicacy, "Periwinkles - Italian Style."

Ed Bander disembarks from the Regina Maris after it docks in Maine.

Were there problems along the way? Surprisingly few. By the time the ship had returned to Boston, we had lost two of our three trawling nets. This caused difficulties because trawling for marine life was important to the scientists' research. It was important also in that the scallop, crab, and varieties of fish pulled up from the ocean were welcomed additions to the cook's soup kettle.

Our trip was a learning as well as a scientific experience. The Suffolk contingent learned about the ways of a sailing ship, the nature of marine experiments, and the environmental aspects of northern Maine. We experienced life without its many comforts. We saw the ocean in ways that most of us had never seen before. And most came away feeling that in the words of Conrad,

*The sea never changes
And its works, for all the talk of men,
Are wrapped in mystery.*

David J. Saliba becomes alumni-trustee

David J. Saliba has been elected to a three-year term as an alumni-trustee on Suffolk University's Board of Trustees. Mr. Saliba, a Boston attorney specializing in appellate tax law, received an associate of arts degree from Suffolk University in 1949 and a juris doctor degree from the University's Law School in 1952. He has maintained a close association with the University serving in numerous capacities including president of the Suffolk University Law School Alumni Association, chairman of the annual Law School Alumni Dinner, chairman of the Law School Reunion Committee, and chairman of the Law School's Annual Fund Drive in the Winchester area. He presently serves as a Law School Alumni Association director.

Mr. Saliba holds membership in the Justinian Law Society, the Massachusetts Trial Lawyers Association, and is a member of the Board of Directors of the Industrial Credit Union. He is the author of a book entitled, REAL ESTATE VALUATION IN COURT, and has lectured on real estate tax appeals at Suffolk University's Law School.

Chairman Fulmer, in announcing Saliba's election said, "We look forward to his full participation in the governance of Suffolk University. His demonstrated loyalty as a leader among alumni of the Law School, his undergraduate background in the liberal arts at Suffolk University and his broad professional experience match the interests of the University closely. Mr. Saliba will bring important new strength to the Board of Trustees."

Saliba is married to the former Gilda Corso, who received her bachelor of arts degree from Suffolk University in 1950. They have four children. □

Annual Fund for the Colleges holds steady

Mel Cheney, AB '50 general chairman for the Annual Fund for the Colleges, has announced the kickoff of the 1980-1981 campaign. "We are confident that this year's fund drive for the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the School of Management will be a success," said Cheney. Cheney also said, "We will be asking those alumni who have never given to the Annual Fund to make a contribution. Our primary goal is to build up the number of donors at different levels."

The 1979-1980 Annual Fund campaign which was just completed, held its own in unrestricted gifts from alumni when compared with the previous year. "We received $27,000 from 984 alumni in 1978-1979 compared to $26,000 from 967 alumni this year.

"With the help of our alumni volunteer network, we will be working to increase the number of donors in 1980-1981," stated Cheney.

Working with Cheney this year on the executive committee of the Annual Fund will be Pamela Scangas, AB '72, vice chairperson for volunteers, Sid Levin, BS '52, chairman of the Cornerstone Society and Robert Kane, AB '66, chairman of the Beacon Club.

The Annual Fund for the Colleges, which accepts gifts from alumni and friends of Suffolk University, helps the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the School of Management meet their financial obligations. □

New directory to be published

In 1978 a directory of graduates of Suffolk University Law School was published. Now a directory of graduates of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the School of Management is being planned. The project is the work of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the School of Management Alumni Associations directory committee and the alumni/development office.

The schedule for the directory's preparation calls for the distribution of a questionnaire to all College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and School of Management alumni in early fall. Alumni are urged to spend the few minutes it takes to complete the questionnaire and to return it in the envelope provided. The questionnaire should provide the alumni/development office with current addresses for all active alumni. It is also hoped that anyone knowing the whereabouts of lost alumni will indicate their names and addresses on the questionnaire so that the University can update its records. In this way, the information in the directory will be as complete and as current as possible.

Alumni will have the opportunity to purchase the directory which is scheduled for distribution in the summer of 1981. □

Suffolk University students (L-R) Tom Lenox, Vinnie Conte and Mary Singleton greet the crowds from the 75th Anniversary float, as student Nancy Conti walks beside it.

It's a parade! On Sunday, September 21, Boston 350 held its Grand Parade through the streets of Boston. Suffolk University participated in the parade with a blue and gold decorated float. Costumed students represented members of each of the University's three schools. The float was the work of the 75th Anniversary Committee and was intended to both say Happy Birthday to Boston and to inform the community of Suffolk University's own birthday in 1981.
Alumni workshop planned

The General Alumni Association College Committee will be conducting a Financial Aid Workshop for Suffolk University alumni who have friends and family of college age. The workshop will assist those in applying for financial aid by reviewing the necessary applications required for financial assistance at any college or university. The workshop will be held in late January. Anyone who is interested may contact Robert West, director of alumni programs, Colleges, at 723-4700, ext. 129.

ABCD and Suffolk University collaborate in journalism program

This summer Suffolk University in coordination with Action for Boston Community Development (ABCD), launched a journalism program believed to be the first of its kind in the nation. It was designed to develop the journalistic skills of Boston high school students giving them first-hand experience in the field.

Nearly 40 low income students between the ages of 14 and 18 participated in the program developed by Arnie Waters, director of youth affairs at ABCD, Dr. Malcolm J. Barach, chairman of Suffolk University's journalism department, and Keith Westerman of ABCD.

One of the program's highlights was a journalism conference held on August 5 at Suffolk University. Guest speakers for the event where Dennis Vandal, BSJ '75, a photojournalist for the Worcester-Telegram Gazette, Carmen Fields, a WNAC-TV reporter, and Dan Rae, a WBZ-TV reporter. Vandal, who has never taken a photography course but has used cameras since he was 12, turned from reporting to photojournalism two years ago.

The program's primary objective was the development of an eight-page newspaper, The Boston Spotlight. Written by teens for teens it deals with such issues as drug abuse, teenage drinking, and child abuse. Twenty thousand copies were distributed to area residents, ABCD students, and their families.

The program placed heavy accent on the students' gaining practical experience within a workshop environment. Areas covered were writing, reporting, editing, typography, and the journalist's ethical and legal responsibilities in society.

Program instructors were Westerman and Kimberly Todd, BSJ '80. Program counselors included Suffolk journalism majors, Karen McLaughlin and Jane Mancini. It is expected that the program will be repeated next summer.

Varsity hockey returns to Suffolk University

By Lou Connelly

Varsity hockey, making a comeback at Suffolk University this winter after an absence of 27 years, will be returning in style.

It won’t be like the late forties and early fifties when the weather often dictated whether or not there would be a game on the outdoor, natural-ice rinks.

This winter, Suffolk’s new entry in the NCAA Division III ranks will be playing 10 home games at Boston University’s Walter Brown Arena. The Rams also have a varsity coach with solid hockey credentials, John Corbett, who has coached at Tewksbury High School for 14 years. And they will be carrying a 26-man squad, more than the number who tried out for the team in some of those seasons three decades ago.

“I’m really excited about the prospects of coaching at Suffolk University,” related the 36-year old Corbett, a former hockey star at Providence College, who grew up in Somerville. “I left a rather comfortable situation at Tewksbury High School, being there 14 years, but I wanted the challenge of college hockey and Suffolk seemed like the good opportunity.”

Corbett could become very comfortable at Suffolk in a hurry since he has no less than 21 players to greet him from last year’s Suffolk club hockey team which compiled a 15-4-1 record.

That includes high scoring Paul Doris of Charlestown, who registered 43 points, and goalie Bob Rooney. Corbett has also recruited an outstanding goalie from Christopher Columbus High School, John Libby.

Corbett feels that Suffolk can move into Division III as a contender. “We have 11 of our 12 top scorers back and Suffolk met and did well against Division III teams last year.”

Among the teams on the Ram’s schedule is Bentley College, which was Division III champion a year ago. Division III has 26 teams competing, far fewer than the number competing in Division III basketball. And unlike basketball, having no home site isn’t much of a disadvantage since most of the division’s colleges rent ice time.

There aren’t that many so-called blue chippers recruited for Division III hockey. Most of the name players are gobbled up by the Division I and II schools and the city kids are sometimes totally ignored. Nevertheless, there are plenty of hockey players to go around.

“It’s the result of the Bobby Orr craze of the early seventies,” explained Corbett. “Remember all the rinks that sprang up, all the pee wee and bantam leagues? The craze is fading now but all these college-aged kids today are the products of those leagues so there are plenty of hockey players to go around."

The opposite has happened to Suffolk's successful basketball program which had four straight NCAA Division III tournament teams before the well went dry two years ago. A new rule in Division III eliminating scholarships and basing all assistance on financial need has hurt the gymless Rams since many promising hoop players available for need will take a campus and gym over a commuter school with no facility.

Corbett has named an assistant coach, a colleague of his in the Merrimack Valley. He is Dana Morrill of Dracut, who started the hockey program at the high school.

The Rams are expected to play 22 games this season. The home games will be played at B.U.'s Brown rink at 7:30 on Wednesday evenings. "We have 14 schedule commitments to date including Plymouth State and hope to get Fitchburg State too," Corbett said.

Grey-haired alumni might remember some of the old hockey games at Suffolk University. They were a hardy breed in those days.

A Friday, Jan. 13, 1950 Suffolk Journal had this lead about the upcoming game: "Suffolk's scrappy ice sextet will seek revenge for a pre-vacation defeat when they meet Holy Cross tonight on the Crusader's home ice at Worcester (that is if 'Old Man Winter' will relent and give us a little freezing weather to put ice on the outdoor rinks.) A planned weekend trip to Maine was knocked haywire when Bowdoin officials called and cancelled the Friday, Jan. 6th game because of a stretch of mild weather."

The Suffolk University hockey program began back in the 1946-47 season. The first coach was Tom Moon, a former Boston Olympics hockey goalie. In those days, Suffolk teams were known as the Royals. In ensuing years the teams were coached by Dave Perkins, a one-time hockey captain at Suffolk, Tom Collins, Dick Thomas, and Charlie Law.

Following the post World War II boom, hockey began to wane at the University. So few candidates turned out for Charlie Law's practice call in October of 1952, that the program was dropped the following year.

But all that has changed now and in hockey crazy Boston the sport could come back strong in the eighties.

="This is a hockey hotbed," said Athletic Director Jim Nelson. "I see the revival of the sport as something to complement our basketball program not compete against it. The hockey club had a good following in school and now with varsity hockey and John Corbett's enthusiasm, there should be even greater interest."

"Like John Corbett, I'm very excited about the upcoming varsity program and hope the student body and alumni will get behind it," said Nelson.

So does Corbett, who plans to contact student leaders to pledge support for the Rams. "Success, of course breeds support. Everyone likes a winner. We'll show a lot of enthusiasm, and I think the people will like what they see," he promised.
