Suffolk University receives a $250,000 Kresge Foundation challenge grant

President Perlman was recently notified that the University has been selected as the recipient of a $250,000 challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation. This grant places the Campaign for Excellence well over the $2,000,000 mark.

“This generous challenge grant puts us within reach of our goal,” said Perlman, “but it is also just what it says it is, a challenge grant, and it is imperative that we meet that challenge, which is to raise the remaining half million dollars by December.”

The Kresge Foundation considered some 1551 qualified proposals this year before awarding grants to 176 charitable organizations in 39 states, the District of Columbia, and Canada. Most of the grants were toward projects involving construction or renovation of facilities.

Most recipients had raised initial funds toward their respective projects before requesting foundation assistance and the grants were authorized on a challenge basis.

The Kresge Foundation, based in Troy, Michigan, was created solely by personal gifts of the late Sebastian S. Kresge. Since 1924, appropriations of more than $416 million have been made to institutions in the area of higher education, health care and related services, the arts and humanities, social welfare, science, conservation, and religion.

Those not so lazy days of summer

There were traditional classes. . .

This year the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the School of Management offered two summer sessions. Day classes for the first session ran from May 19 to June 26; evening classes ran a week longer, from May 19 to July 2. Classes for the second session began on July 7 and concluded on August 14 for day classes and August 21 for evening classes.

Day classes normally met for four days per week, Monday through Thursday. This allowed students a three-day weekend for study or relaxation. Day students normally carried two courses per session and could attend either or both sessions.

Classes in the evening normally met two evenings per week with students carrying either one or two courses.

Course offerings this summer ran the gamut from a course on copy editing to an introduction to data processing to a course on the French Revolution and Napoleon.

The 1981 Suffolk University Law School summer session ran from June 1 to July 30. Classes were held in the evening, Monday through Thursday, and covered such topics as family law, intellectual property, and tax sheltered investments.

Journalism sessions for the city’s youth. . .

Malcolm Barach, chairperson of the department of journalism at Suffolk University, joined the faculty in 1970.

Barach, the first full-time journalism professor hired at the University since the 1950’s, has a special interest in high school students, especially students in the Boston area. More than a decade ago, he developed a high school newspaper competition for Boston students. The contest has become an annual event.

Now the ambitious professor has devised a method by which the essentials of journalism can be taught to young people in two-week and eight-week programs.

In June, the federally funded summer youth work program, Action for Boston Community Development (ABCD), marked its second year at Suffolk University. The eight-week workshop afforded approximately 35 multiethnic junior high, high school and college students from low-income families the opportunity to learn basic journalism skills. The students produced two issues of a newspaper, and for added incentive, received a paycheck for the job experience.

The ABCD program has traditionally offered young people employment in day-care centers, offices, libraries, and street cleaning programs. But it was Barach’s idea to implement a journalism workshop. Assisted by two members of the ABCD staff, and several Suffolk University journalism majors who served as counselors, Barach taught the essentials — reporting, writing, headline writing, layout, photography, and editing. There were field trips to the Boston Globe and The Christian Science Monitor, and guest appearances by local journalists.

Barach said, “Many of the students in the ABCD program don’t necessarily want careers in journalism, but the skills learned are useful, and can be applied to their school newspapers and year-

If you’ve had the impression that once the last final examination is over, Suffolk University winds down to a maze of empty classrooms and abandoned corridors populated only by a few administrators and the night watchman, have another look.

Each of the University’s three schools has a summer session offering students many of the same courses taught throughout the school year in a less crowded and often more relaxed environment.

In addition, during the summer there are innovative programs and activities that extend beyond the traditional classroom and even beyond the Beacon Hill campus.

In this issue, the Alumni Bulletin looks at summer at Suffolk University and finds much going on between the end of classes in the spring and the start of the new year in September.
books.” He added, “The idea of the ABCD program was taken from the success of the Urban Minority Workshop,” which the professor coordinated in 1976.

In August, one week before the close of the ABCD program, Barach welcomed twenty-two high school students to the sixth annual Urban Minority Workshop. The two-week program, which is funded by the Newspaper Fund of Princeton, New Jersey, is one of about 20 in the United States.

“We’ll have a couple of these youngsters on TV someday.”

The Urban Minority Workshop differs from the ABCD program in that the participants are strictly minority high school students, and are chosen for the workshop based on academic achievement and interest in the field of journalism. Though the students in this program were not paid for work, lunches were free, and transportation costs reimbursed.

Barach noted, “The percentage of minorities in the media is still very small.” He added, “The purpose of the Urban Minority Workshop is to promote journalism as a potential career opportunity for minority students.”

Maggie Rivas, a Boston Globe staff writer, was primary instructor for the Urban Minority Workshop. Topics covered included the evolution of journalism in America, the art of reporting, the laws of communications, and the art of photojournalism. The students took several field trips, including a tour of WNAC-TV, and guest speakers were invited to the workshop. The session ended with the production of a newspaper.

According to Barach, “The Urban Minority Workshop has reached a point where brothers and sisters of previous participants pop up as candidates two years later. Parents call to see if their other children can get into the program. Some students have even been asked to return as aides.”

Barach has seen former Urban Minority Workshop students further their education “at Suffolk, Harvard, Radcliffe, and Brown,” and is convinced, “We’ll have a couple of these youngsters on TV someday.”

Of the ABCD program and Urban Minority Workshop, Barach said, “Both programs are successful models for teaching.” He added, “The students are both working and socializing. They’re meeting interesting people, and they’re learning — but it’s not pure academia.”

A test run for future law students...

"It's aimed at creating a buffer against the trauma experienced during the first year of law school. It's a rigorous program, but I recommend it," said Rene Medina of Manhattan, New York, of her experience at the CLEO (Council of Legal Education Opportunity) summer institute held at Suffolk University this summer.

Medina, a graduate of Iowa College, will be attending Boston College Law School in the fall. She was one of 33 prospective law school students who came to the University to undergo the intense program which simulates the first year of law school.

The students, considered economically and educationally disadvantaged, came to Suffolk University Law School from throughout the Northeast region. Suffolk was one of seven law schools throughout the nation selected to host the program.

Under the direction of Suffolk's Associate Professor of Law Russell A. Murphy, the program began its six-week run on June 22. Students took a four-week course on the law of agency and a two-week course on torts, contracts, criminal law and legal reasoning. They attended classes from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. and were tested on Saturday.

Students also had the opportunity to meet and talk with lawyers, judges, law professors and law school students about law school experiences and career choices.

Gladys Carbuccia of Queens, New York, who will be attending Rutgers University, said of the program, "It's worthwhile and I felt fortunate to be involved in it." Carbuccia is a graduate of Fordham University.

And Lucy Leon of New York City, who will be attending Yeshiva University, Benjamin Cardozo Law School, commented, "It's helped us prepare for the long hours of study, the exams, and the methods and attitudes of law school professors. You learn time management and you also learn that law school isn't the mystical glorified thing you thought it would be. You work all the time. The program makes you ask yourself, 'Do I really want to go to law school?"' Leon is a graduate of Columbia University.

"Do I really want to go to law school?"

Faculty members for the institute included Murphy, Attorney Wayne Budd, president of the Massachusetts Bar Association, Judge Roderick Ireland of the Juvenile Court of Boston, Suffolk University professors Gerard Clark and Richard Perlmutter, and Attorney Leslie S. Espinosa of Cambridge.

The CLEO program was jointly sponsored by the American Bar Association, the United States Department of Education, and a consortium of schools in the region, including all the law schools in Boston.

Although all the participants in the Suffolk program had fully or conditionally been accepted to law school, acceptance is not a requirement for participation in the program. All participants, however, must be certified by the national CLEO office in Washington, D.C. as potentially qualified for law school admission.

Five of the participants in the Suffolk program may be attending Suffolk University Law School.

Business educators refined their skills...

In April, Suffolk University’s department of education mailed brochures to all secondary and post-secondary full-time business education teachers in the New England states and parts of New York and Canada.

In July, as a result of those mailings, 99 business education teachers convened at Suffolk University for the Business Education Summer Institutes, a program co-sponsored by Suffolk University’s department of education and the Gregg Division of the McGraw-Hill Book Company.

Louis A. D’Abrosca, assistant professor of education at the University, and coordinator of this year’s program was pleased that, “The institutes drew such a large number of respondents — and from so many geographical regions. These are factors that will aid in spreading Suffolk University’s name, and attracting new students.”

Current issues and trends in word processing, office education, accounting, and data processing were discussed by visiting professors, nationally known leaders in the field of business education. Each institute carried three graduate credits which could be applied to the master of science degree in business education. Word processing was the most popular course, attracting 53 registrants.

The Business Education Summer Institutes were first offered in the summer of 1978 under the direction of Barbara Ash, assistant professor of education. D’Abrosca, who has taught at the University for two years, said the approach of this year’s institutes was somewhat different from the previous programs, because whereas, “They have traditionally been one or two-day methods conferences, the recent workshops were divided into three one-week sessions.”

According to a final report prepared by D’Abrosca on the Business Education Summer Institutes, upon the completion of each week-long workshop, a questionnaire was distributed to all participants in an effort to define the population that attended the institutes, and to identify those aspects of the institutes that were most popular.

The responses to the questionnaire showed that the primary residence of the participants was Boston and its suburbs, with a substantial number of educators from eastern and southeastern Massachusetts. Most were high school teachers, and a small number taught at private or community colleges. Seventy-five percent of the 99 professionals were full-time teachers with one to 10 years teaching experience.

The majority of participants did not hold a master’s degree in business education. Seventy-five percent of the teachers were enrolled in or completing the master of science degree in business education at Suffolk University. Twenty-five percent of the participants were not enrolled in any degree program. The most important reasons for attending the institutes were the length of the workshops, the reputation of the Suffolk University Business Education program, and the reputation of the visiting scholars.

D’Abrosca called the Business Education Summer Institutes “highly successful.” The professor said he received an “overwhelmingly positive response from the participants of the institutes,” and hopes such a program will be offered again in the future.

Older citizens went to class...

They came from places like Fulton, Texas; Media, Pennsylvania; Bessemer, Alabama and Stafford, Virginia, and many of them were hearing about Suffolk University for the first time. When the week was over, they were so impressed they had composed a song about the University.

The setting was the Robert S. Friedman Laboratory, owned and operated by Suffolk University on the shores of Cobscook Bay in Edmunds, Maine, a rugged, rustic locale some 320 miles from Beacon Hill. In attendance were 25 people over 60 years of age taking part in the University's first Elderhostel program.

Elderhostel, Inc. is an independent, non-profit corporation serving older adults by coordinating a network of summer educational programs at colleges and universities throughout the country. Inspired by youth hostels in Europe, it was formed in Durham, N.H. in 1975 as an experiment among five New Hampshire colleges hosting 200 people. Since then, Elderhostel has mushroomed into a nation-wide program with 35,000 participants and more than 400 colleges and universities involved.

Suffolk University hosted its Elderhostel program during the week of August 9-15. Three Suffolk faculty members taught in the program which featured courses in Marine Animals of the Maine Coast, Terrestrial Vertebrates of the Moosehorn Area, and Art for Enjoyment. They were Dr. Arthur J. West II, chairman of the Biology Department and director of the Cobscook Bay field station; Dr. Robert Howe of the Biology Department; and Professor Raymond Parks of the Humanities and Languages Department.

Among the 25 participants were six married couples. Serving as coordinator to the group was Mrs. Rosalie Warren, a widow who lives on Beacon Hill. The 81-year old Mrs. Warren earned her bachelor of science degree from Suffolk University under the school’s free senior citizen program in June of 1980 and serves as Suffolk senior citizen adviser.

Many of the group, a sprightly gathering whose activity belied senior citizen status, had attended previous Elderhostel programs at other universities across the country.

“This was my eighth Elderhostel program, and they get better all the time,” enthused Ruth S. Kaplan of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, a 68-year old retired teacher. Said Kaplan of Suffolk’s beautifully rustic property, “I only wish this place were closer to my home.”

The participants were housed in cabins on the station property. The program began on Sunday and classes were presented daily. Included were field trips to nearby Cobscook State Park, Campobello Island and Calais, Maine.

Meals were served at the field station dining area, three square servings prepared daily by Dr. Cleophas Boudreau, chairman of the University’s Humanities and Languages Department, and a cook of some distinction. Quipped Rose Kesler of Inwood, N.Y., “I owe Dr. Boudreau a special thanks for helping me with my low salt diet.”

Dr. Samuel Matz of Ventnor, N.J., an optometrist, and his wife, Bernice, rated the program “excellent,” and had one word to describe the environment at the field station: “Breathtaking.”

Listen to Mrs. Jane McRae, from Bessemer, Alabama, describe her week at Cobscook: “It was a tremendous learning experience. The Robert S. Friedman Laboratory offered a remarkable spirit of contrasts — the beauty and simplicity of the physical surroundings, the intellectual stimulation and integrity of the professors and the enthusiastic response by the learners, not to forget the visual delights of seeing a bald eagle, watching seals slide off the rocks in the bay, the blueberry festival, and the Maine folklore. This was my first Elderhostel and others will have a high standard to meet to compare with Suffolk University’s, which was directed at the highest professional level.”

By week’s end, the walls of the station’s interior were lined with paintings done by the Parks art class which had received his evaluation.

Norman F. Commo of Fulton, Texas, heard about the Elderhostel program from a neighbor, and after perusing the paper listing the courses, selected the Suffolk program in Maine. A retired Army sergeant, used to roughing it, he was impressed by the adaptability of the group to the rugged surroundings.

The participants arose at dawn. On the final day of the program, Dr. West had the group out for field work at 5 a.m. This was followed by classroom lectures by Professors Parks and Howe. A lobster dinner capped the full week.

“This was my eighth Elderhostel program, and they get better all the time.”

Dr. Arthur J. West thought the program was a “tremendous sharing experience for all concerned,” and also noted, “The participants were attentive and response, particularly in the light of the fact that they were not earning college credit. What was encouraging was that they were not looking for creature comfort but selected the site as a challenge, knowing the conditions.”

As a number of participants observed, “This was different from sitting around in dorms and classrooms. This was unique.”

Dr. West considered the program a definite success. “For those from the Boston area, it gave a different focus on Suffolk University and some are already interested in taking courses at the school. We’d like to expand it next year by offering some additional courses.”
And a new program was shaped

This summer, faculty members and administrators of Suffolk University's School of Management have been finalizing plans for a new executive master of public administration program which will begin in October.

Modelled after the University's successful executive MBA program, the executive MPA program will offer experienced public managers the opportunity to obtain the MPA degree by attending classes on Saturdays.

“Our executive MBA program has attracted strong and mature people,” notes Dr. Richard L. McDowell, dean of the School of Management. “This has permitted a more competitive learning environment. We hope to repeat this in our new executive MPA program.”

Suffolk University is one of three schools in the Boston area offering the MPA degree. It is, however, the first school to offer the Saturday program.

Candidates for admission to the program must have at least five years of experience within public management or in a professional level position in addition to holding a bachelor's degree. Participation is limited to small groups of about 25 individuals who will progress through the program as a unit.

All elements of Suffolk's regular MPA program will be included in the new Saturday program. “We expect, however, that the Saturday program will cover more material and have a somewhat different focus due to the maturity of the students,” Dean McDowell points out. A special feature is that students enrolled in the executive MPA program may select courses from the executive MBA program and vice versa. In this way, students will get the best of both programs.

Students will attend four 11-week quarters running throughout the calendar year. Classes will be in session from 8:45 a.m. until 5:00 p.m. Students will take two courses per quarter and must attend classes for the full twelve-month cycle. Ten required courses and six electives are necessary to complete the two-year program.

Peter Nowak, director of the executive MBA program, will also serve as director of the executive MPA program. Faculty members will include Dr. Frances Burke, professor of public management; Dr. Charles E. Davis, assistant professor of public management; Dr. Michael Lavin, assistant professor of public management; and Dr. David Pfeiffer, professor of public management.

Persons wishing further information on the new program may contact Peter Nowak at 723-4700.

And something else happened this summer...

Throughout the summer, work continued on the University's new facilities. In early July, the Colleges' registrar's office, the Colleges' admissions office and other administrative offices moved into new quarters in the Ashburton Place Building. By the end of the summer, the School of Management had moved from its former home on Mount Vernon street and was also located in the new Ashburton Place Building.

Renovations also continued in the Donahue Building and at other locations on the Suffolk campus.

How do these changes affect Suffolk University? In the next issue of the Alumni Bulletin, we'll look at the school as its ambitious facilities development plan nears completion.
John Howe is elected Board chairman

John S. Howe, retired chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the Provident Institution for Savings, has been elected chairman of the Board of Trustees of Suffolk University.

Howe, who currently heads the University's capital campaign, The Campaign for Excellence, succeeds Vincent A. Fulmer, secretary of the corporation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who served as chairman of the Suffolk University Board for five years.

A Suffolk trustee since October of 1974, Howe resides on Beacon Hill. In 1958, he was named president of the Provident and served in that position and later as board chairman until retiring in 1979. Prior to 1958 he had been treasurer and vice president of the bank. His career in investment banking, commercial banking and savings banking spans more than 40 years.

In making the announcement, President Perlman hailed the deep commitment Fulmer and Howe have made to Suffolk University.

“Mr. Fulmer and Mr. Howe have given unstintingly of their creative energies and considerable talents. Their leadership on the Board of Trustees has helped and will continue to help Suffolk University meet the challenges and opportunities of the 1980’s by expanding its role of providing higher education in the Arts and Sciences, in Management, and in Law for people of all backgrounds.”

Howe is a past president of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, past president of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, past president and campaign chairman of the United Way of Massachusetts Bay, Inc. and is a member of the board of trustees of Robert Breck Brigham Hospital.

A graduate of Milton Academy, Harvard College and the Graduate School of Banking at Rutgers University, he was a captain in the U.S. Army during World War II. He is a past president and director of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children and a member of the Greater Boston Advisory Board to the Salvation Army.

At Suffolk, Howe is chairman of the Finance and Investment Committees and a member of the School of Management committee, Building Committee, Endowment Committee, Salary Sub-Committee, Trustees Visiting Committee for the School of Management, and the Student Affairs Committee.

Fulmer was elected chairman of the Board July 1, 1976. He has been a Suffolk trustee since 1972. President Perlman pointed out that under Fulmer’s chairmanship the Board of Trustees 1) moved decisively to improve the University’s physical facilities; 2) launched the University’s first capital drive in nearly 15 years; 3) established a search process for the selection of a president to succeed Thomas A. Fulham, who retired after 10 years of distinguished service; 4) strengthened the Board’s membership through several key appointments and 5) began celebration of the University’s 75th anniversary.

Commencement '81

With the spirit of Suffolk University's 75th anniversary evident throughout the day, seventh president, Dr. Daniel H. Perlman, conferred a total of 1137 degrees at the annual commencement exercises Sunday, June 14, at the John B. Hynes Veterans' Auditorium, Back Bay.

It was the first Suffolk commencement for Dr. Perlman, who succeeded Thomas A. Fulham last August. Perlman awarded 478 juris doctor degrees to Law School graduates in the morning and 659 degrees to graduates of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the School of Management in the afternoon.

Boston Mayor Kevin H. White spoke at the Law School exercises while Dr. John William Ward, president emeritus of Amherst College and chairman of the former Special Commission on State and County Buildings, gave the afternoon address.

As a special feature, in connection with its diamond jubilee, the University sponsored a champagne reception for graduates and their guests following both exercises. In addition, in a new touch to the commencement, the law graduates received welcoming remarks from Marianne B. Bowler of Brookline, JD '76, president of the Law School Alumni Association. Frank A. Sablone, BSBA '70, Ed M '71, gave welcoming remarks to the Colleges' graduates.

Mayor White, in his address, charged that the judiciary has "annexed the tasks historically the province of elected officials.

"Our classrooms, our housings, even our tax rates, all have fallen under the watchful eye of today's activist judiciary," White declared. "Clocks have a way of resisting those who would try to set them back. Reversing the growth of judicial authority now would be as futile as looking back for Lot's wife."

He urged the graduates to "make public issues a constant and central part of your lives. Do it by all means, before you reach the bench — or you may never fully comprehend the intimacy and mutual respect that the lawmaker and lawyers must experience if the law itself is to adequately reflect society's realities as well as its ideals."

He told the graduates, "At Suffolk, you have sought out wisdom as well as knowledge. The city itself has been your greatest classroom. You have learned from each other, as well as from books and scholars of the law. And now you are about to embark into a confused, turbulent and uncertain world. You do not have my compassion; you have my envy."

White was well received by the graduates and others in the audience and was applauded again when President Perlman conferred upon him the honorary degree of doctor of laws.

Ward, who chaired the Ward Commission on corruption, reminded the graduates of the responsibility they owe to the city, which, he noted, is becoming a "city of the poor and undereducated." He pointed out that a fourth of the population is now on some form of welfare and described the public school system as a "mockery of the traditional role of public education as the vehicle for equality and opportunity."

Ward said that while degrees carry with them certain rights and responsibilities, "in a democratic society, the greatest title of them all is 'citizen.'" He said that "we are a community, members of the same body, bound together in a common enterprise, the creation of a decent and humane society." President Perlman awarded Ward the honorary degree of doctor of humane letters.

Serving as Marshal for the 25th anniversary graduating class from the Law School was Congressman John J. Moakley of Boston. Marshal for the colleges was Dr. George N. Torrey of Salem State College, BSBA '56.

The exercises marked the final commencement call for Vincent A. Fulmer, who stepped down as chairman of the Board after five years in that post. Fulmer, who opened the past five commencement exercises, will continue on as a Trustee.

Special awards went to Timothy Q. Feeley of Malone, N.Y., who received the Outstanding Student Award in the day division of the Law School, and also addressed the graduates, and Nancy J. Marks of Brookline, outstanding student in the evening division, and also the recipient of the Daniel J. Fern Award, named for a 1931 alumnus.

Among the Law School graduates was Suffolk County Sheriff Dennis Kearney, who attended Suffolk evenings.

Two juris doctor degrees were awarded posthumously. They went to Gary A. Jack of Pawtucket, R.I., who drowned in a scuba diving accident last summer, and Lynn M. Hopkins of Baltimore, Maryland, who was killed in an auto accident last Fall.

A 62-year old grandmother from South Easton, Mass., Charlotte H. Svendsen, received a bachelor of arts degree magna cum laude during the afternoon program. Mrs. Svendsen, a mother of five and grandmother of six, resumed her education 10 years ago, some 35 years after she was graduated from Hyde Park High School. She attended Suffolk evenings, majoring in English.

Special scholarship awards went to Catherine Lee of Leominster, a government major, $2500 for study of international relations at John Hopkins University; Ronald E. Cotter of Brockton, a biology major, $1500 for graduate work at Bowling Green State University, and Kevin B. O'Brien of Somerville, a history major, $500 for doctoral work in economics at the University of Michigan.

In the School of Management, James P. Vasil of Worcester, received a $500 award for graduate study in Suffolk's M.B.A. program, the recipient of the Mrs. Robert E. Anders Memorial Scholarship.
Physics students gain recognition

During the 1980-1981 academic year, a number of physics majors at Suffolk University were recognized for their outstanding academic achievements in their field.

James M. Daher, a member of the class of 1981, was one of only 17 students in the country selected for a one-semester undergraduate research participation program at Argonne National Laboratory, Argonne, Illinois. Daher worked on calculations of the reaction rate for the exchange of an electron from a chlorophyll radical to a chlorophyll molecule in a low concentration solution using spin echo spectroscopy. His project and calculations involved deriving a theoretical relationship between electron spin echo decay rates and chemical exchange for the case of inhomogeneously broadened free radicals in solution. His performance, during the fall, 1981 term was rated as excellent, which was the highest rating given.

Daher has been accepted into the Ph.D in physics program at Johns Hopkins University. While at Suffolk University, he participated in the solar energy project on campus and at the University’s Cobscook Bay Laboratory in Maine. The solar energy project is under the direction of Dr. Walter H. Johnson, chairman of the Department of Physics. As a result of that project, he was one of four Suffolk University students presenting papers at the New England section of the American Physics Society. Others presenting papers were Allie Kafel, Richard Devito, and Joseph Kochoki.

Another undergraduate research project involves making use of the University’s COBOLT 60 gamma radiation source. This project involves the study of the effects of gamma radiation on cadmium telluride crystals. The project is being carried out in cooperation with Radiation Monitoring Device Company in Watertown. Students participating in that project are Richard Devito and Christopher Devaney.

Annual reception honors new MBA president

On June 19, during the alumni reception at the annual meeting of the Massachusetts Bar Association, alumni, faculty, and friends had the opportunity to congratulate Thomas J. Wynn, JD ’68, who begins his term as president of the Massachusetts Bar Association.

Wynn received his AB degree in political science from Providence College in 1962. A former special assistant attorney general, he became a member of the Massachusetts Bar Association’s Board of Delegates in 1977 and was elected vice president of the organization in 1979. Wynn is also a member of the International Association of Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions. He is a partner in Wynn and Wynn law firm in Taunton.

More than 200 attended the reception which is an annual event.
Raymond Parks presents Cobscook Bay

Raymond Parks, Associate Professor of Humanities and Languages and artist-in-residence at Suffolk University opened his studio to the public this spring.

Parks presented 16 oil paintings, 11 of which were inspired by his impressions of Cobscook Bay, Maine, the location of Suffolk University’s Robert S. Friedman Laboratory. Five of the works included a self-portrait, and portraits of his students.

The showing was kicked off by a reception in the Florence R. Petherick Studio in the Mount Vernon Building, co-sponsored by the Humanities Club, and the Beta Beta Beta Biological Society. It was attended by President Daniel H. Perlman, President Emeritus and Mrs. Thomas A. Fulham, retired humanities professor Dr. Florence R. Petherick, and many students, faculty, staff, and community residents.

Parks’ association with Cobscook Bay began in the summer when he was invited by Dr. Arthur West, chairperson of the biology department to look at the site. Parks said he “didn’t know the motive at first,” but added that when he arrived, he knew immediately that it was his “job to capture and bring back Cobscook Bay, through the eyes of an artist, for people who had not yet had the opportunity to see it for themselves.”

Parks spent two weeks in residence at Cobscook Bay “sketching various scenes.” He called the area “a gorgeous place,” but admitted with a laugh, that unlike his native Central America, “It was a bit damp and cold.”

Parks said he was especially fascinated by the “metamorphosis of the tidal movement, not to mention the seaweed, the sea urchins, and the formations.”

The artist noted that his project was especially challenging because of the light factor involved when painting — especially outside. He generally paints no more than one hour at a time outside, because the sun is constantly changing the perspective of the subject.

Nevertheless, because of his “strong positive feeling for Suffolk University,” the artist persisted, and produced a series of paintings that he is proud of.

Dr. Arthur West said, “Ray Parks has made an extremely valuable contribution to the University through his paintings at Cobscook Bay. His paintings are an excellent reflection of an opportunity that a Suffolk University faculty member had to use a resource that isn’t readily known or thought about by the community.” West added, “Ray gave expression to what he saw there, and has opened the vision of the area to a lot more people.”

Associate professor of Humanities and Languages Raymond Parks receives congratulations from (left) Dr. Arthur J. West II, chairman of the Biology Department and (right) Dr. Cleophas W. Boudreau, chairman of the Department of Humanities and Languages.

Eighty-five golfers participated in the Fourth Annual Alumni Golf Day, which was held at the Oakley Country Club in Watertown on June 29. Alumni and friends of the University enjoyed an afternoon of golf and an evening of prizes and friendship.

Andrew J. Campbell, BS’80, was the winner of the first Charles Law Memorial Golf Tournament Trophy. Helping to make the presentation of the trophy were (l-r) James Nelson, athletic director; Andrew Campbell; Brian O’Neill, JD’71, master of ceremonies.
Suffolk needs alumni help in accreditation study

Suffolk University was last accredited by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges in the Spring of 1972, and is presently engaged in an institution-wide self-study in preparation for re-accreditation by NEASC and for initial accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business in the Fall of 1982.

The self-study involves administration, faculty, students, and alumni in an effort to evaluate the University's strengths, weaknesses, and opportunities for future development. To this end, the faculties have been organized into eight task groups that will study areas such as identity; faculty governance, development, and life; program review and instruction; physical facilities; and student services. In addition, the general evaluation task group will study purposes and objectives; evaluation and planning; financial resources; special activities; publications and ethical practices; community and alumni relations; and library and learning resources. In studying these areas, the central focus will be on evaluating the University's effectiveness in providing a quality education for students.

The timing of the joint accreditation visit, the fall of 1982, roughly coincides with the completion of a $9,930,000 facilities development project and the culmination of the $2,735,000 Campaign for Excellence. Both President Daniel H. Perlman and Associate Dean Joseph H. Strain, chairman of the self-study steering committee, have emphasized the crucial importance of alumni participation in the study.

You will shortly receive a copy of an alumni questionnaire which is intended to serve a dual purpose: to provide information for a new Alumni Directory for the Colleges and alumni feedback for the accreditation self-study. A key aspect of the study includes an evaluation of the extent to which Suffolk University is achieving its goals. As part of this evaluation, trustees, faculty, administrators, and students will be asked to respond to appropriate questionnaires. Your response to the alumni questionnaire will provide the various task groups with a basis for further discussion and decision. This is your opportunity to make recommendations for improving and strengthening Suffolk University. Your responses will help the University to strengthen its services and programs and to assure that it is effectively meeting the needs of students by providing a quality education.

Alumni to elect new alumni-trustee

The alumni-trustee committee, composed of three members of the Board of Trustees and the presidents of the three alumni associations, has announced that they are receiving nominations for the position of alumni-trustee on the Suffolk University Board of Trustees. Any graduate may nominate either himself or another graduate for the position.

A nomination form appears at the back of this issue of the Alumni Bulletin. It should be completed and returned to the alumni-trustee committee who will select three candidates from among those nominated. Those individuals' names and biographies will then appear on the ballot which will be mailed to all graduates later this year.

Upon receipt of the ballots, the alumni-trustee committee will determine the winner by simple enumeration and submit the winner's name to the Board of Trustees for further action.

Currently, Dr. Harry Zohn, AB'46, the Honorable James J. Nixon, JD'55 and David J. Saliba, AA'49, JD'52, are serving as alumni-trustees. Dr. Zohn's term expires in December, 1981.
The Heritage Series pamphlets are nearing completion

The remaining pamphlets in the Heritage Series are nearing completion and will be ready for distribution to alumni later this year. Edited and largely written by Professor of History David L. Robbins, the series contains eight pamphlets dealing with the seventy-five year history of Suffolk University. Seven of the pamphlets were written expressly for the Heritage Series. The first two of these, “Setting the Scene” and “Gleason L. Archer” have already been distributed. Others in the series include pamphlets dealing with the history of each of the three schools (the Law School, the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, and the School of Management), a social history of Suffolk University and a pamphlet about the shapers of the institution. The other pamphlet in the series, called “An Important Message” is a reprint of a 1919 brochure which was distributed to alumni in the spring of 1978.

In addition to separate distribution, the pamphlets in the series will be re-edited into a single volume and made available for purchase by alumni and friends of the University. Copies will also be presented to libraries and other academic institutions in the area.

According to Dr. Robbins, the idea for the series grew out of discussions he had with colleagues in 1977. A careful examination of Suffolk University’s historical missions and realities seemed a good way of helping to develop a sense of tradition, heritage, and historic pride among students, faculty, administration, and alumni.

Toward this purpose, the Heritage Committee, chaired by Dr. Robbins, was organized by President Fulham. In addition to producing the historical pamphlet series, the Committee has overseen the Heritage Exhibit which has been on view at numerous University-sponsored events and exhibited at various shopping malls and plazas in the area.

Professor John F. O’Brien is dead at 77

John F.X. O’Brien, professor emeritus at Suffolk University Law School, who during a distinguished 35-year career served as dean of the School of Management and acting dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and Law School, died June 22 in Hollywood, Florida. He was 77 years old.

O’Brien, a popular professor whose trademarks were colorful bow ties, horned-rimmed glasses and a deep stentorian voice, retired in 1977 and moved to Hollywood, Florida, where he had lived. He was taken ill two weeks before his death.

During the forties, O’Brien served as dean of the College of Business Administration and acting dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. He was also acting dean of the Law School from 1952 to 1956. Prior to retirement, he taught contracts and negotiable instruments for 20 years. He made his home in Brookline during his teaching career and was a widower.

Born in Watertown, Professor O’Brien received a bachelor’s degree in business administration from Boston University in 1928, his MBA in 1932, and his JD in 1940. In 1956, Portia Law School (now New England Law School) awarded him an honorary doctor of jurisprudence degree.

Before coming to Suffolk, he taught at St. Francis Xavier College in Antigonish, Nova Scotia and Bryant College, where he was chairman of the department of business law.

He also served as an auditor and master in Suffolk Superior Court during the 1950’s and was a special assistant attorney general for Massachusetts in 1962 and 1963.

At the time of his retirement, Prof. O’Brien was the senior member of the faculty. As such, he delivered an address on behalf of the Law School faculty at the dedication of the John E. Fenton Building in 1975.

Prof. O’Brien left two nephews and a number of cousins.

A funeral mass was celebrated Monday, June 29 at St. Theresa’s Church, West Roxbury.
Alumni boards plan seminars

Following the success of their 1980-81 programs, both the General Alumni Association and the MBA/MPA Alumni Association are planning a series of seminars to be held during the first half of 1982.

The General Alumni Association will sponsor a financial aid seminar in January. Then in the spring of 1982 the MBA/MPA Alumni Association and the General Alumni Association will cosponsor a home buying seminar. In addition, the MBA/MPA Alumni Association expects to run a series of seminars on topics of interest to alumni.

Last year, alumni were able to attend seminars offering practical financial and home buying information.

Darcie Lincoln, director of financial aid, conducted a seminar on obtaining financial aid for college-bound students. She reviewed the 1981 financial aid form and discussed the various funding sources for financing a college education available to families.

The financial aid seminar was sponsored by the College Committee of the General Alumni Association. Gerald Lozeau, AB'64, chairman of the College Committee, said, "I hope this program will help alumni with college-aged children understand the various federal, state, and local programs available for funding a college education."

The MBA/MPA Alumni Association sponsored a financial planning seminar. Ernest Gotta, certified financial planner, outlined to alumni in attendance how to plan for future financial security.

John A. Zorka, MBA'74, president of the University Alumni Council, and a realtor and appraiser at Lexington Realty, hosted a panel of housing experts at the fourth annual home buying seminar in May.

The panel consisted of seven experts who discussed various aspects of purchasing a home. James O. Peterson, JD'78, reviewed purchase and sales agreements; Dennis Lowe, JD'73, discussed the difference between condominium and single family ownership; Eileen Schell, secretary of consumer affairs for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, discussed the laws which protect the consumer when purchasing a home, and William Sutton of Bay Colony Home Inspection, presented a slide show highlighting those areas which should be considered when purchasing a home.

In addition, Paul Morrone, a current MBA student, discussed the advantages of building your own home; Shephard Rainie, vice president of Workingmen's Cooperative Bank, reviewed the mortgage market, and Mr. Zorka discussed the different types of homes available to the consumer.

Alumni will receive information concerning future seminar programs later in the year.
May we have this dance?

The second annual Presidential Ball will be held on Saturday evening, October 24 at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel.

See you there.

Faculty Notes

LAW SCHOOL
Suffolk University received an Honorable Mention in the 1981 National Association of College and University Business Officers/United States Steel Foundation Cost Reduction Incentive Awards Competition. The proposal, submitted by Edward Bander, law librarian, described the in-house repair of books by the Law School library staff. Not only are dollars saved by this in-house repair, the staff is also able to keep more books on the shelves for use and to devote more time to students' needs rather than to record-keeping of books out for repair.

Professor Charles P. Kindregan has authored a book on legal malpractice entitled, Malpractice and the Lawyer. The book is designed as a practical introduction for the general practitioner or the lawyer who is not in the malpractice field.

COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS & SCIENCES
Melanie Zybal, lecturer in the History department, was selected to participate in the 1981 Summer Seminar Program for College Teachers sponsored by the National Endowment for the Humanities. Ms. Zybal received a $2,500 stipend to study at Cornell University in Ithaca, New York. The seminar, led by Dr. Laurence Moore of Cornell, focused on “Outside the Mainline Churches: Religious Diversity in 19th and 20th Century America.”

The proposal, submitted by the staff of the Law School, was recently honored by the Attleboro Court Bar Association for his 52-year membership in that association.

School of Management
Lynn G. Wadsworth, BSBA, has been elected second vice president, policy holders service administration, at John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company.
