How Law Placement helps turn students into lawyers

by John C. Deliso

Last fall, law firms from as far away as Germany and as near as downtown Boston recruited students on campus at Suffolk University Law School. That's a far cry from the days when Suffolk was known primarily as a local school.

As the law school has grown in quality and reputation, so too have grown the services that it offers to graduates through the Law School Placement Office.

At its inception in 1971, the Placement Office consisted of a director and one secretary located at 56 Temple Street. It was not until 1975 that an assistant director was hired. Today, three professionals and two secretaries staff the offices in the Frank Donahue Building.

It's a rare student who doesn't make use of the services offered by the Placement Office at some point during his or her academic career. There are numerous programs, publications and services available designed to assist each student and graduate with his or her professional goals.

Suffolk University Law School is a charter member of the National Association of Law Placement (NALP), an organization devoted to new lawyer career development. Its membership consists of ABA-approved law schools, numbering in excess of 500, actively engaged in the recruitment of lawyers. NALP annually publishes salary surveys and employment reports on recent law school graduates as well as directories of information on employers and member law schools.

The Law School is also a member of the Placement Consortium of Massachusetts Law Schools. The Consortium, consisting of the seven law schools within the state, annually sponsors career information and recruitment programs for its members' students. Among the programs that the Consortium has sponsored are: Public Service Career Day, Corporation Symposium, Legal Aid and Public Defenders Employment Seminar, and Small Firm Recruitment Program.

A look through the programs sponsored by the Placement Office shows the variety of services offered that can, as one graduate put it, "be the critical factor in making that important initial contact":

- The Alumni Newsletter, a bimonthly publication, contains listings for attorneys from employers throughout the nation. Any graduate of the Law School may receive the newsletter by sending a written request to the Placement Office.
- Alumni Panels, sponsored at various times throughout the year, are designed specifically to inform students about different aspects of the legal profession. Alumni speak with students about their careers, including relating details of how they obtained employment, discussing their responsibilities, and offering suggestions to students interested in a career in their particular area. The Placement Office encourages alumni who are interested in visiting the school as a panel member or assisting students in discussing career goals and professional opportunities to call or write. A form to indicate your interest is located at the end of this article.

• The Placement Bulletin, a 14-page pamphlet, is designed to inform the non-Suffolk lawyer about the school. Such topics as geographical distribution of the student body, representation of undergraduate colleges, curriculum, clinical programs, the Law Library, school publications and activities, as well as a comprehensive discussion of evening legal education are reviewed. The objective of this publication is to make lawyers who hire lawyers aware of the dynamics of Suffolk University Law School.

• The Placement Office Library, first established during the fall of 1980, is located across from the Placement Office on the ground floor of the Donahue Building. The library is open every day during normal office hours and until 7:00 p.m. on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. The individual job listings by category of full-time attorneys, judicial clerkships, part-time positions, summer clerkships, work-study and volunteer positions are located there. In addition, the library maintains a wide variety of placement-oriented periodicals, employment surveys and legal directories for student and alumni use.

• The On-Campus Recruitment Program has expanded rapidly over the past year. During the 1981-1982 academic year, approximately 75 employers have interviewed students on campus. The Placement Office considers these visits to be of the highest priority in that they are an excellent vehicle for non-Suffolk attorneys to acquaint themselves with the school and its students. Many of these on-campus visits are the direct result of a personal visit made by the Placement Office to perspective employers. If you or a member of your firm would like to interview students at the Law School during either the spring or fall, please contact the Placement Office at 723-4700 extension 148 to arrange a convenient time.

• The Student Handbook is a comprehensive publication written for students and available to alumni. Subjects covered include timetables for applying for jobs, resume and cover letter writing, and lawyer per capita information for all 50 states.

• Resume Workshops. Since the resume and the cover letter are the foundation of every job hunt, they deserve special attention. The Placement Office sponsors weekly workshops. It is mandatory that all first-year students attend a workshop before meeting with a professional staff member of the Placement Office.

As Suffolk University Law School grows in reputation, it will continue to draw more and more of its student body from out-of-state. The competition that Suffolk (and other law school) graduates will face upon graduation will continue to be rigorous, particularly in the Northeast. These are challenges for Law School placement. But the mission of the office—of making entrance into and advancement in the legal profession as easy as possible—will remain the same.

* The Federal Government is the principal employer of attorneys in the District of Columbia.
A long day’s journey finds a home.

by Karen Y. Corbin

Everyone was interested in him, but nobody was doing anything about him. That’s why Dr. Frederick C. Wilkins, chairman of the Department of English at Suffolk University started the Eugene O’Neill Newsletter.

The scholarly journal about the life and works of the prolific writer is read by people in towns as near as Brookline and Needham and in countries as far away as India and Taiwan.

Editor Wilkins vividly remembers its birth, “It grew out of a 1975 English honors seminar on O’Neill in which I’d chosen twelve of the top undergraduates in the University.”

Smiling, Wilkins recalls that the students were so excited about O’Neill, “that it redoubled my own enthusiasm.”

Wilkins then thought of the topic in relation to a conference of the Modern Language Association (MLA) scheduled for San Francisco in December of 1976. “Little overall analysis was being done on O’Neill at the time. I decided to give it a try myself.”

He arranged to direct a special session on the playwright at the MLA conference and gathered together six of the country’s experts on O’Neill—biographers, scholars and professors, to discuss “The Enduring O’Neill: Which Plays Will Survive?”

Wilkins says the results were astonishing. He proudly recalls, “They’d given us a tiny room designed to hold no more than 30 people and assigned us an hour somewhere around dawn, evidently expecting that nobody would care to come anyway!”

Instead, the crowd of over 100 spilled into the hallway outside, and that was just the response Wilkins needed to indicate the interest in O’Neill. He recorded the session, took the tape home, transcribed and edited it, and mailed a preview issue of the Newsletter to all the Eugene O’Neill aficionados he knew. The Eugene O’Neill Newsletter was born.

O’Neill (1888-1953), the son of renowned actor James O’Neill, won three Pulitzer Prizes and, in 1936, the Nobel Prize, for virtually fathering modern American drama in a series of plays that combined social analysis with personal introspection. He made liberal use of his own life experiences which included adventures at sea, alcoholism, psychoanalysis, three marriages, a debilitating disease, and above all, a boyhood spent in the company of a parsimonious father and a drug addicted mother. Long Day’s Journey Into Night, whose Tyrone family are really the O’Neills, is considered by most critics the greatest play ever written by an American.

Though materials for the Newsletter are submitted from around the globe, editor Wilkins and associate editor Marshall Brooks, BS’76, are solely responsible for its production. Brooks, who was a student in Wilkins’ 1975 honors class, also does art and layout for the publication. He joined the Newsletter in January, 1979.

Wilkins isn’t quite sure how readers have become aware of the Newsletter, which is published three times a year, but he notes that institutions such as the National Library of Scotland and the Sorbonne University in France are subscribers.

Individuals pay $6 per yearly subscription, and institutions pay $10. Wilkins says, "Subscribers sustain us. We're not getting grant money."

The professor adds, "Anyone is welcome to subscribe or submit material." He indicates that the literary contributions to The Eugene O'Neill Newsletter are as diverse as the places the publication is mailed to. "We have roaming reporters all over the world."

The editors receive scholarly papers, feature articles, photographs, and play and book reviews. Notes Brooks, "The Newsletter keeps tabs on O'Neill productions around the world, new publications, rare performances and fresh approaches to putting on O'Neill plays."

He adds, "It allows us to get our ideas across and to air the ideas of others."

Wilkins says, "Whereas around 1956 there was a low ebb as far as O'Neill's reputation was concerned, there has been a recent renaissance of interest in the playwright."

Now, devotees are looking forward to 1988, the centennial of O'Neill's birth. Pulitzer prize-winning author Lousi Sheaffer and others have published a two-volume biography of O'Neill, O'Neill's family cottage in New London, Connecticut has been restored, and a new manifestation of the Old Wharf Theatre in Provincetown, where O'Neill's first one-act plays were performed in the summer of 1916, will soon reopen.

Brooks says, "The interest in Eugene O'Neill is not just here in the United States, but genuinely everywhere." A recent New York Times article supported this: "...places that are closely associated with the life and career of America's Nobel Prize-winning playwright are being increasingly studied, enshrined, and otherwise memorialized in ways that supplement production of his dramatic work here and abroad."

Frederick Wilkins reveals, "There are several different groups that like to keep their hold on O'Neill. And they're very competitive. Each wants to hold on to its piece of Eugene. The Newsletter brings them all together in an amicable relationship, and that's tremendously important—they can accomplish so much more if they do it together."

Wilkins is considered by the international Eugene O'Neill Society to be a capable devoted O'Neill scholar. He was elected to a four-year term on the Society's Board of Directors and has been elected vice president for a two-year term.

Of Wilkins, The New York Times said on February 8, 1981, "Professor Frederick C. Wilkins, chairman of the English Department at Boston's Suffolk University and editor of the five-year-old Eugene O'Neill Newsletter, emphasizes the dramatist's power to move audiences: 'I went to the first American public performance of 'Long Day's Journey Into Night' at the Wilbur Theater in Boston in the late 1950's,' he recalls, 'and it was a galvanizing experience."

Eugene O'Neill lived in many places including Boston, Marblehead, New Haven, New York City, Atlanta and San Francisco. Brooks says, "O'Neill crisscrossed the country and people know about him for different reasons. There are a lot of people who have O'Neill stories to share."

For example, he heard a rumor that a Suffolk University professor had an O'Neill story to tell and sure enough, one did.

Dr. John C. Cavanagh, chairman of the department of history told of how his mother, Marjorie Carroll, rode a train from Washington D.C. to Lynchburg, Virginia when she was a college student in about 1926. She was reading a book of plays when she was interrupted by a young, handsome, mustached man sitting across the aisle. The man engaged her in conversation, then said he was going to the baggage car to feed his dog, a wolfhound and persuaded her to come see the animal with him. Shortly thereafter, she spotted a picture of the man and his dog in a publication and found, to her amazement that it was O'Neill. The man had told her he wrote plays, and even told her the plot for one he was working on, but never revealed his name to her.

Brooks says, "The Eugene O'Neill Newsletter is a warm publication, and people respond to that warmth. A woman from Brooklyn, New York wrote, "I am probably the least academic and/or theatrical subscriber to your publication, never having attended a university, not even a little college—nor presently active in the theater behind the footlights. But I am an O'Neill aficionado. It might interest you to know that I use the Newsletter as a source of education."

To her comment Brooks points out, "The Newsletter is totally accessible to everyone. And a student shouldn't be without it. I can take some of my interests and quite naturally run into O'Neill. The real motivator is O'Neill himself." As if delivering a sales pitch, the associate editor says, "He is fascinating, ambiguous, and curious. There is so much to write about O'Neill. It's like plums waiting to be picked. We haven't been stymied yet."

When Wilkins thinks about the success of the Eugene O'Neill Newsletter, and looks back on how it came to be, he says, "I thought there would be some interested people, and it would last for a year or so—and everything would be said and done, and we'd close shop."

Not so.
Campaign for Excellence—
a success story

by Frank L. Whitson

"Enclosed is my three-year pledge to the campaign. My employer does not have a matching gift program, but I am asking management to consider establishing one."

Several months later, we received another letter from the same alumna. Her employer had initiated a matching gift program and she was attaching a check matching her gift to the Campaign for Excellence.

Such was the kind of effort put forth by hundreds of alumni and friends of Suffolk University throughout the campaign. It served as a continual inspiration and motivation to the campaign leadership.

The Campaign for Excellence began in June, 1980 with a goal of $2,735,000. Part of a long-term facilities development project, the campaign was an unprecedented undertaking to raise funds to help finance the project which resulted in the complete renovation of the building at 8 Ashburton Place, now known as the Frank Sawyer Building, and alterations to the Frank J. Donahue Building, the Gleason and Hiram Archer Building and the building at 56 Temple Street. It ended in December, 1981, at a total of $3,619,595, some $884,595 over the campaign target. The campaign, which resulted in the receipt of more than 2,600 individual pledges, was the most fruitful in Suffolk's history, ending at 32% above goal.

A capital campaign is a fund-raising campaign for a special purpose or need beyond normal operating expenses. Annual appeal funds are used to support the day to day activities and programs of the University. The most effective way to ask for money is through personal contact. To approach a large number of potential donors, we needed the assistance of many individuals. Through the efforts of members of the Leadership Gifts Committee, a committee consisting primarily of trustees and alumni and chaired by President Emeritus Thomas A. Fulham, the University received pledges totaling $1,525,000 from six individual benefactors.

Perhaps the most heartening response came from alumni. In May, 1980, the University sent a letter to all alumni informing them of the undertaking. We followed this with periodic newsletters highlighting the campaign's progress. We also reported our progress in the Alumni Bulletin. But personal communication is best. So we scheduled a series of area meetings and receptions and some class receptions to reach alumni and ask for their help.

The culmination of our efforts to reach alumni came in the fall, when we held a series of twenty-six evening phonathons. At that time, we had just received word from the Kresge Foundation that we were the recipients of a $250,000 challenge grant. This was the first major gift from a major national foundation that Suffolk University had received. Implicit in the grant was the understanding that we would complete the campaign in a timely fashion.

We turned the new alumni conference room on the eighth floor of the Frank Sawyer Building into a phonathon center, installing twenty-five telephones for volunteer use. Though alumni comprised the majority of our callers, we had the full assistance of law students, graduate and undergraduate students, faculty members and University administrators.

Each evening when callers arrived, they had dinner first, then were given a stack of pledge cards and settled down to... make their calls. We posted the highest total of pledges received by a volunteer and each evening, breaking that amount and establishing a new higher total became an incentive for everyone making calls. We also gave a prize each evening for the highest amount of pledges received that evening. This helped create a sense of competition as callers attempted to surpass the accomplishments of previous callers and of fellow alumni present that evening.

Most volunteers would call for two to three hours. One student, however, came several times. He always arrived in a running suit, fixed himself a huge plate of food, then settled down to make his calls. He always managed an excellent response for his efforts. When he had finished, he would get up, help himself to another plate of food, then leave.

One evening, when our volunteers were having a particularly difficult time making contact with alumni, an alumnus walked in at about 8:30 p.m. He took a stack of pledge cards, sat down and placed calls for twenty minutes. At the end of that time, he had racked up the highest total of the evening and took home the prize.

The results of the phonathons, like the results of the campaign, were overwhelmingly positive. We received nearly 1500 pledges totaling over $172,000. This amount surpassed our goal by 15%.

Many individuals and organizations gave Suffolk University a vote of confidence. The success of the campaign proves this. The University can continue to accomplish its educational mission in the community with better facilities than before. The University is grateful for the superb support we received and wishes to thank everyone who so kindly helped when asked.

For those of you who have not had an opportunity to visit the Frank Sawyer Building or the other newly renovated buildings, do plan to stop by when you can. We're proud of our new facilities. We think you will be too.

Frank Whitson is Suffolk University's director of development. He was closely associated with the Campaign for Excellence from its beginning to its close.

Phyllis Mack is authority on a study of a social issue

“At least one out of every 15 people who drink is going to get into serious trouble,” says Suffolk University Sociology Professor Phyllis Mack, emphasizing the seriousness of alcoholism in this country.

Professor Mack teaches Alcoholism in Contemporary Society at Suffolk and has studied the area of alcoholism so deeply that she says, “It’s like a hobby now.”

Ten years ago, when she set out to pursue a doctorate degree, Dr. Mack wanted to focus on a women’s issue. Her research delved into the study of the alcoholic mother. “In our society,” Dr. Mack notes, “few things are worse.”

As her knowledge and interest in the subject of alcoholism grew, so did her desire to develop a course at Suffolk University dealing especially with the issue. That course has now proven to be a popular one among students. Says Professor Mack, “When you want to learn more about something, you teach it. Each year I get a new piece of insight for myself.”

“People turn to alcohol because it’s there. We’re a drinking culture, and it’s the thing to do.” The professor observes, “Alcohol is a sign of hospitality. It eases people’s tensions and makes one relaxed socially.

“Beer and wine are pushed day and night on television,” she explains, noting that the liquor industry spends $206 million advertising liquor annually. She notes also that alcoholism costs the nation $43 billion a year in absenteeism, lost jobs, highway accident costs, and other areas.

No one really knows what causes alcoholism, according to Professor Mack. “We can’t tell if the cause is psychological, social, physical or some combination, but chances are, it’s a combination. It’s as hard as finding the causes of cancer. There may be several different kinds of alcoholism.”

In 1978, Professor Mack was awarded a scholarship by the Massachusetts Department of Health to attend Rutgers University Summer School for Alcohol Studies. Her study there involved two areas; women and alcohol, and the elderly and alcohol. “These are two of the most neglected groups in the field,” she says.

In addition to the study of alcoholism, Dr. Mack has maintained her keen interest in women’s studies. This spring, the Phyllis Mack prize for an undergraduate paper in women’s studies was awarded for the first time. Sponsored jointly by the Women’s Center and the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences at Suffolk, the prize includes a cash award and a certificate of merit. Students submitted papers in any academic field of women’s studies and wrote in the form of research, analysis or creative writing.

Summing her feelings about alcohol, Phyllis Mack observes, “alcohol is a little like fire. It’s been around for years. It’s useful and it’s pleasant, but it also can destroy. It can warm us, but it can be a terror.”

Boston Magazine spotlights Law School

The December, 1981 issue of Boston Magazine featured a seven-page article about Suffolk University Law School. Tracing the Law School’s evolution from an evening school with open enrollment founded in 1906 and catering to working men, the article concluded that the school has been “transformed by the law school boom into a training ground for the political and legal elite.”

Author Joseph Rosenbloom III spent several days on the Suffolk campus interviewing members of the Law School community in preparation for the article. Among those interviewed was Dean David J. Sargent, with whom he had a lengthy discussion. Sargent was quoted as observing, “Where we were once very definitely a Massachusetts law school, we are now a very strong regional, as opposed to national, law school. We cover the entire Atlantic seaboard.”

When asked if he would put Suffolk on a par with other Boston law schools, Sargent replied, “Absolutely. I believe that Suffolk compares favorably with any of the law schools in Boston.”

The article noted the growing receptiveness on the part of large law firms to the hiring of Suffolk graduates. It quoted Assistant Dean John C. Deliso’s observation, “I find people in the know at the very very top are receptive to us. As far as I’m concerned, in the law practice of the country, that’s the ball game.” And, the article pointed out, Suffolk graduates are going to work for those large firms in increasing numbers.

More and more, Suffolk University Law School is a school of quality successfully educating professional intelligent men and women. That, the Boston Magazine article resolved, is not a bad thing.
Hunter and Sylvester win client counseling competition

During the first semester of each school year, the Moot Court Board of the Law School runs its Client Counseling Competition. The Board is pleased to announce that this year’s winners were Claudia Adams Hunter (Class of 1982) and Maura Sylvester (Class of 1983).

The Client Counseling Competition is a national competition sponsored by the Law Student Division of the American Bar Association. Each year, every ABA approved law school and recognized Canadian law school is invited to enter one team, composed of two law students, which competes in a regional competition. The winning team in each regional competition competes in the national competition.

The Client Counseling Competition run at Suffolk University, therefore, is actually a preliminary intra-school competition, designed to determine which two students will have the honor of representing the Law School as a team at the regional level. The competition is open to all second, third and fourth year law students. Each student competes with a partner of his or her own choosing.

This year a record number of sixty-two teams competed in the competition. Six rounds therefore were needed to choose the winning team. The theme of the competition was “Child Custody, Child Support,” so that in each round the competitors were asked to interview “clients” whose “problems” fell into these areas of the law. The client profiles were developed by the Moot Court Board.

The final round of the competition was held on December 3, 1981. The team of Hunter-Sylvester defeated the team of Steve Oliveira (Class of 1982) and Dave Witman (Class of 1982)—although both teams gave excellent performances in how to interview and advise their “clients.” The final round dealt with the issue of visitation rights for grandparents, and the clients’ roles were played by Eda Rabinovitz, a Boston actress, and Lenard Corman, an actor with the Boston Shakespeare Company. Both Ms. Rabinovitz and Mr. Corman gave lively and often funny performances as the troubled grandparents.

Judges for the final round were Monroe Inker, Esq. of Crane and Inker, a Boston law firm, and Jared Adams, Esq. of Adams & Smith, also a Boston law firm. The third judge was the Law School’s own distinguished Professor Charles P. Kindregan, who has been teaching Family Law for about fifteen years.

As a result of their victory, Ms. Hunter and Ms. Sylvester competed in the regional competition of the Client Counseling Competition, which this year was held during the weekend of March 6th at Boston University. The team’s faculty advisor is Professor Richard Pizzano, who teaches a course in Interviewing and Counseling at the Law School.

Moot Court team makes strong showing

The Law School’s National Moot Court Team made an excellent showing in the Region I National Moot Court Competition. The team won its first two oral arguments against New England School of Law and Albany Law School before losing to the team from Boston College Law School, which finished as a finalist in the advocacy competition. The team from Suffolk took home even higher honors in the area of brief writing. Of the twelve teams which competed in the Region I Competition, Suffolk’s brief ranked second—a truly excellent showing. The Moot Court Board salutes this year’s team and congratulates them on a job well done.

Members of this team included Gary Kinsella, Lori Collins-Tremblay, Rob Avolio and Cindy Needle (all from the Class of 1983). The team’s faculty advisor was Professor Marc Greenbaum, who teaches Labor Law and Employment Discrimination.
Law School Alumni Association holds annual dinner

More than 650 alumni and guests jammed the main ballroom of the Boston Park Plaza Hotel on December 3 as Suffolk University climaxed its 75th Anniversary activities with its annual dinner sponsored by the Suffolk University Law School Alumni Association.

Dean David J. Sargent, selected as the principal speaker for the Law School dinner’s diamond jubilee, saluted the Law School, of which he is a 1954 graduate, for “75 years of producing outstanding men and women who have served with sensitivity, ability and professionalism in the representation of individual clients.”

Three alumni were honored with awards for their service to the legal profession and their contributions to Suffolk University Law School. They were Congressman John Joseph Moakley, JD ‘56, who was unable to be present, Attorney Stephen T. Keefe, JD ‘49, a major general in the United States Air Force Reserve, and Thomas J. Wynn, JD ’68, president of the Massachusetts Bar Association.

The dinner featured a head table of 48, made up of the Commonwealth’s outstanding jurists from all of its courts. In addition to the dean, other speakers addressing the gathering were President Daniel H. Perlman, retired Superior Court Chief Justice Walter M. McLaughlin, JD ’30, and Attorney Abner R. Sisson, JD ’28. Harold Cohen, JD ’55, was dinner chairman and Paul R. Tierney, JD ’64, Suffolk County Register of Deeds and president of the Suffolk University Law School Alumni Association, was toastmaster.

In his address, Dean Sargent struck out at the Kutak Law, proposed by the chairman of the special commission appointed by the American Bar Association. The law would abolish the current code of professional conduct and replace it with a new model requiring lawyers to disclose confidences to the public heretofore considered between lawyer and client.

“This would not only breach the confidentiality of the attorney-client relationship, but would destroy this privilege,” Sargent declared. “The concept of Kutak is that it serves the public interest by yielding some of the individual rights. I believe that the public interest is best served by serving every member of the public one at a time and not wholesale.”

Sargent cautioned that the legal system is “designed not as a search for pure truth but as a truth consistent with full recognition of the rights of the individuals involved.”

Donahue Series Continues

Three distinguished professors of law were included in the 1982 Donahue Lecture Series.

On Thursday, March 4, Theodore J. St. Antoine, professor of law at the University of Michigan Law School, presented a lecture entitled, “Free Speech or Economic Weapons: The Persisting Problem of Picketing”. Professor St. Antoine is a well-known authority in the field of labor law.

G. Edward White, professor of law at the University of Virginia School of Law, spoke on “Revising History: Revisiting the Marshall Court” on Thursday, March 25. In addition to teaching tort law and legal history, Professor White has published over 25 law review articles and book reviews and is currently writing one of the Holmes Devise Histories of the Supreme Court of the United States, covering the Marshall Court from 1815 through 1835.

On Friday, April 25, Grant Gilmore, professor of law at Vermont Law School presented a lecture entitled, “Reflections on Statutory Nullifications”. Professor Gilmore teaches and lectures in the fields of contracts, legal history, commercial law, and admiralty.

The Donahue Lecture Series was instituted by the Suffolk University Law Review in 1980. It was named in honor of Frank J. Donahue, ’24, the late Superior Court justice who served Suffolk University as faculty member, trustee and treasurer.
Second CLEO program to be held at Law School

For the second consecutive year, Suffolk University Law School has been selected to serve as host for the Northeast Regional CLEO (Council on Legal Education) Summer Institute.

The program, which will run for six weeks during the summer of 1982, will bring to the Law School approximately thirty graduating college seniors, certified by the national CLEO office in Washington, D.C. as potentially qualified for law school admission. All students in the program are considered economically and educationally disadvantaged.

The 1982 institute will be under the direction of Russell A. Murphy, associate professor of law, and will include faculty from Suffolk University and the Boston area.

CLEO has sponsored summer institutes at ABA-accredited law schools since 1968.

Federal funds help strengthen University programs

Suffolk University is using funds awarded through the U.S. Department of Education's Strengthening Developing Institutions Program to strengthen its programs in a number of areas. The $250,000 in federal funds will be used for the development of student services, curricula, and administrative capabilities.

Dr. Michael H. Rubino, director of the Career Planning and Placement office, intends to use funds to improve the office's ability to provide career related experiences to students, to communicate to students the importance of career awareness and early preparation, and to develop and implement a career development model. To assist Dr. Rubino in this project, Peter J. Mollo has joined the staff of the Career Planning and Placement office as career development coordinator.

Dr. Kenneth F. Garni, director of the Counseling Center will develop a comprehensive and autonomous learning center and will integrate and coordinate existing academic support services. Dr. Kevin Lyons has been appointed director of the Learning Resource Center.

Dr. Walter H. Johnson is responsible for the curriculum development project in the computer science area. Science programs will be developed and improved to serve the needs of high technology in the Boston area. This activity will allow the University to develop curricula, to coordinate programs, to establish external affiliations and to procure equipment for computer science education. Barbara Gralla, a part-time instructor in the Physics Department, serves as part-time project coordinator and will assist Dr. Johnson in this activity.

The federal funds will also allow the University to strengthen existing academic programs in Health and Life Sciences in the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and in International Management in the School of Management.

The University expects to strengthen career oriented programs, specifically the Medical Technology program offered by the Biology Department. This project will be administrated by Dr. Arthur J. West II, Biology Department chairman.

Under the direction of Richard L. McDowell, Dean of the School of Management, curriculum in the School of Management will be strengthened by the inclusion of an international management component in the curriculum. Professor Jane Ives has been hired to oversee this project.

Alumni elect alumni-trustee

Frank A. Sablone has been elected by alumni to a three-year term as an alumni-trustee of Suffolk University. Mr. Sablone received his bachelor of science in business administration degree in 1970 and his masters in education degree in 1971 from Suffolk University. He is currently director of annual giving at Joslin Diabetes Center, Boston. He was Suffolk University’s first assistant director of development, serving in that capacity from 1975 to 1979.

Mr. Sablone has maintained close ties with the University since graduation. He was an alumni association director from 1971 to 1975 and has been a director of the General Alumni Association from 1979 to the present. He served two terms as president of that association.

A past chairman of the annual Suffolk University Golf Day, Mr. Sablone holds membership in numerous professional and social organizations and is an honorary member of the Washington D.C. Alumni Association.

In announcing the election, Board of Trustees Chairman John S. Howe said, "We welcome Frank Sablone and his full participation as a trustee of Suffolk University. As a holder of two degrees from the University, and as president of the General Alumni Association, he has demonstrated true loyalty and deep commitment to Suffolk University over a long period of time. He will add new vitality to the board."

Mr. Sablone and his wife, Julie, make their home in Chelmsford with their three children.
A new program for the Sociology Department

Thanks to a direct grant from the Association of American Colleges (AAC), Suffolk University's Department of Sociology has been able to enlarge its curriculum to include a course which marries the academic to the applied. Dr. Steven Spitzer, associate professor of sociology, entered AAC's QUILL (Quality in Liberal Learning) competition in late 1980, submitting a proposal entitled, Sociology and Urban Problems: Learning About and Working in the Urban Environment. His proposal won the $6,000 grant, the funds for which were provided by the Exxon Foundation and the George I. Alden Trust.

The proposal sought to incorporate liberal learning with career preparation with the goal of producing a broadly educated professional.

The unique project resulting from the grant took place in two phases. The first phase occurred during the summer of 1981. Two seminars, held on the Suffolk University campus, brought together full and part-time faculty members, students, and professionals and academics from the metropolitan Boston area.

Those attending the seminars were trying to find methods to help students study sociology in ways that will help them respond to the "real world" problems they will face when they begin their careers, and to help them assimilate the growing body of sociological knowledge we have about the city. They wished to help students learn about specific careers in the city milieu without losing sight of the richness of sociological knowledge and technique, and to assess what kinds of critical skills and sensitivities are vital to understanding the city and its problems.

What evolved from the summer seminars was the development of a core course which was first held in the fall 1981 semester and which will be an ongoing course required of all sociology majors. Sociology majors enrolled in the course (and there are 260 sociology majors at Suffolk University) examine in the classroom the sociological perspective to the study of crime control, health care, human services and community organization. In addition, they gain valuable field experience through internships in social agencies throughout the city. This combination of theoretical and practical experience lays the groundwork for their further study in the field and for their eventual careers.

Says Dr. Spitzer, "The course we are offering this spring has been refined somewhat from the first course we offered in the fall. We expect and hope that it will continue to evolve in the future. The failure in the past has been that there hasn't been a combination of principles and findings. We think we are beginning to correct that now."

Alumni questionnaires are tabulated

If you are a graduate of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences or the School of Management, did you receive a copy of the alumni questionnaire that was mailed in late 1981 and again early this winter? Did you answer and return it? If so, you're probably wondering what's happened to the information you sent back.

The Alumni/Development Office, working with the Directory Committee, is in the process of updating alumni files. When this is completed, the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences/ School of Management Alumni Directory will be published. This directory will contain names and current addresses for all active alumni, as well as listings of lost or deceased alumni. Any graduate wishing to purchase a copy of the directory may do so by contacting the Alumni/ Development office at 723-4700, extension 453.

In addition to aiding in the publication of the directory, the information provided by alumni will give statistical data on alumni. This data, concerning career and life directions and attitudes toward Suffolk University, is needed by the University as it prepares for reaccreditation by the New England Association of Schools and Colleges and for initial accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business.

It is expected that the new alumni directory will be completed and ready for distribution later in 1982.
School of Management hosts national conference

Each year, the National Conference on Teaching Public Administration meets to exchange ideas, share teaching experiences and explore new directions. This year, the conference met at Suffolk University on May 7 and 8.

Participants in the conference met in small informal working group sessions and heard papers dealing with a variety of subjects including the teaching of public finance and budgeting, public problems and problem solving, policy analysis and evaluation, and management information systems.

The conference was sponsored by the department of public management of Suffolk University’s School of Management and by the Section on Public Administration Education of the American Society of Public Administration and the Massachusetts Chapter of the American Society of Public Administrators. Coordinator for the conference was Dr. Michael Lavin, assistant professor of public management.

Says Dr. Lavin, “We had over forty papers submitted and were pleased not only with the number, but also with the quality of those papers. I should stress that this was a national conference and we attracted participants from all over the country.”

Lavin further points out, “We hosted many people from outside the New England area so we planned a cruise around Boston Harbor, a clam bake and an evening at the play, 'Shear Madness' as well as the working sessions.”

There was a $50 registration fee for the conference which included all conference materials, a copy of the conference Proceedings, and breakfast, lunch and coffee for both days.

Joanne Carr, education professor, dies

A memorial service was held at Suffolk University on February 9 for Dr. Joanne E. Carr, 33, assistant professor of education and director of special education at the University. She died suddenly on January 26.

A native of Albany, New York, Dr. Carr grew up in St. Petersburg, Florida and was graduated from the University of Florida in 1970. She received a master’s degree in education from the University of Southern Florida in 1971 and a Ph.D. in special education from the University of Georgia in 1978.

She joined the Suffolk University faculty in 1978 after working as a specialist in the field of the emotionally handicapped. At Suffolk University, she recently had started a course in human sexuality and had taught three courses concerning children with special needs. She had also conducted workshops on special needs education for the Newton school system. In addition to her teaching career, Dr. Carr was an outstanding swimmer and took part in a number of New England and Amateur Athletic Union events.

President Perlman called Professor Carr’s death “a shock to all of us and a tragedy for the University to lose such a dynamic, young and vital member of its family.”

Dr. Carr is survived by her mother and stepfather, Eleanor and Aebra Brainin of St. Petersburg Beach, Florida, two brothers, Robert of Asheville, North Carolina and Howard of Lawrence, Kansas, and her fiance, Russel Pergament of Brookline.

The Joanne E. Carr Memorial fund has been established at Suffolk University. Persons wishing to contribute to the fund may do so by sending donations to the Department of Education at Suffolk University or by contacting Dr. Donald Unger, the department chairperson, at 723-4700, extension 264.

FACULTY NOTES

COLLEGE OF LIBERAL ARTS & SCIENCES

Associate Professor Malcolm Barach of the Department of Journalism has been notified that the Newspaper Fund, Inc. has again approved a grant for the proposed Urban Journalism Workshop for minority high school students. The Education Department's Assistant Professor Louis A. D'Abrosca served as chairman of an accreditation team to the Kinyon-Campbell School in New Bedford early in January. Bette Mandl of the English Department, addressed the annual meeting of the Council of Teachers of English. Her topic was, "The Mentorship Factor: Men, Women and Fiction-Reading." Dr. Mandl's article, "Martha Quest: The Dynamics Mood," appeared in the Winter issue of The Doris Lessing Newsletter. A number of paintings by Associate Professor of Humanities, Raymond Parks, were on display at the Goethe Institute from March 1 to 16, at the personal invitation of Anneliese Harding, art historian of the Institute. The second edition of Professor William Sahakin's History and Systems of Sociology was published in January jointly by McGraw Hill Book Company and Hemisphere Publishing Company. The new edition covers important trends in sociobiology, theology, attribution theory and dissonance theory. Associate Professor Stephen Shatkin of the Department of Education was in Johannesburg, South Africa in October to address 50 psychologists and researchers at the National Institute for Personnel Research. His address was entitled, "Adult Development and Mid-Life Crisis in North America." For several years, Professor John L. Sullivan of the Department of Sociology has been conducting research into the professional roles of air pilots and flight controllers. Some of his findings are contained in a paper entitled, "Some Relationships Between Behavioral Factors and Line Oriented Flight Training" published in Flight Line, the flight operations journal for flight training program development of Eastern Airlines.

The Department of English's Professor Frederick C. Wilkins was elected to a two-year term as vice president of the Eugene O'Neill Society at its December meeting in New York City. The English Department's Lecture Series features these faculty and current research projects: Assistant Professor Ann D. Hughes, whose topic is humor in the Old Testament; Professor Blair F. Bigelow on American political discourse as literature; and Professor Robert Johnson on film producers Francis Ford Coppola and Neil Simon.

SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT

Dr. Warren G. Briggs of the Management Department was general chairman of a conference entitled, "Evaluating Decision Support Software: A Management Perspective" which was held at Suffolk University on March 17. A consortium of local professional societies sponsored the conference. Speakers included Professors Peter Keen and Michael S. Morton of the M.I.T. Sloan School. A panel of users discussed their methods for specifying, evaluating and implementing DSS software. Dr. Briggs also presented a paper related to the topic of DSS package evaluation at Babson College on March 18. Dr. Frances Burke of the Public Management Department has appeared on television news as a member of the former Ward Committee. She also testified at the Commission on Campaign Financing hearing in December concerning the director's position in the Office of Political and Campaign Finance. The Federal Granting System, a guide for local governments in Massachusetts, co-authored by The Public Management Department's Professor Donald Levitan, is in its third printing and has been cited in The Federal Catalog of Federal Domestic Assistance. Assistant Dean Ronald Sundberg has been invited to serve on the Association for Continuing Higher Education's Publications Committee and the editorial review board for Continuing Higher Education. Accounting Professor Robert C. Waechler has authored an article and review, "Management of an Accounting Practice," which appeared in the October issue of The Accounting Review.

LAW SCHOOL

John C. Deliso, director of law placement, has been appointed assistant dean of the Law School. Dean Deliso's assistant, Elizabeth McCombs, will succeed him as placement director. In his new position, Deliso will work closely with Dean David J. Sargent in coordinating Law School administrative functions and will also serve as a liaison to the University's alumni/ development office. Deliso, a 1972 graduate of Suffolk University Law School, established the admissions office, headed that office for six years and has been placement director for the past two years. McCombs has been assistant placement direc-
