Pracademics:
academic integrity and applied experience in the School of Management
David J. Sargent, JD'54, LLD'78, this year celebrates ten years as Dean of Suffolk University Law School. Dean Sargent, who graduated first in his own Suffolk Law class, has been a member of the Law faculty since 1957.

Sargent’s deanship has been, and will no doubt continue to be, eventful. By trimming, over a six-year period, Suffolk Law School enrollment to an approximate 1,600 students, the Law School now has a student-faculty ratio of less than 30 to one. A reaccreditation team representing the New England Association of Schools and Colleges recently remarked in its final report that special mention be made of the Suffolk Law library as “an excellent collection exceeding the standard set by both the American Bar Association and the Association of American Law Schools.”

Friends of Dean Sargent have committed themselves to establishing the David J. Sargent Fellowship Fund at Suffolk University Law School as an enduring salute to his contributions to the quality of legal education. The Sargent Fellows will be selected both for distinguished academic performance and for demonstrable need. Designation as a Sargent Fellow will become the highest form of academic recognition in the Law School. Awards made from the income of the endowed fund will defray at least a significant portion of Suffolk Law School tuition.

A testimonial reception and dinner in Dean Sargent’s honor will be held at the Copley Plaza Hotel on October 20, 1983. (For more on the Deans of the Law School, see page 6.)

hat sort of individual puts his or her Saturdays in hock for as long as twenty-seven months? Is such a person likely to be unemployed? Unhappily employed? Poorly qualified for advancement in the world of work? Bored with life? Or just a plain glutton for punishment?

Answer: None of the above.

The approximately one hundred and fifty men and women enrolled at any given time in Suffolk University School of Management's Executive Master in Business Administration program are almost certain to be:

- holders of full-time responsible positions earning in excess of $25,000 per year;
- between the ages of twenty-five and fifty-five, averaging in the middle thirties;
- people who hold at least one degree and sometimes a second or third;
- enthusiastic employees committed to the companies and institutions where they work;
- and have employers willing to underwrite a substantial portion of the tuition fees for this program.

MBA programs have proliferated all over the country and throughout the Boston area. Many such programs, whether full or part-time, are designed for recent college graduates who wish to strengthen their opportunities for gainful employment in the business sector. Indeed, among graduate schools nationally, business administration and law are perhaps the only "growth" areas in the nation's universities. What, then, makes the Suffolk Executive MBA program highly unusual, if not in fact unique?

Two strong factors are cited by SOM Dean Richard L. McDowell and by the students themselves. Applicants must have had at least five years of experience at management levels to qualify for the program. This guarantees a mature group of students who are acutely aware of the practical realities of management. And, the program is conducted entirely on Saturdays on a year-round basis with few breaks. A Suffolk Executive MBA candidate, should he or she have had some basic courses at the undergraduate level, can frequently complete the master's degree in as short a time as fifteen months. Students who pursue the master's degree on a part-time basis by taking courses in the evenings may find their graduate school time prolonged to as many as three or even four years.

The fact that the Suffolk Executive MBA program is so compact is not, surprisingly, the students' main consideration. While nearly all concede that to be in school from 8:30 on Saturday morning until late in the afternoon is a sacrifice, one that is shared by families when the student is married, most students believe the advantages compensate amply for the sacrifice. "You get up on Saturday and you are a graduate student. All day." is the way one current student puts it. This student, a woman, went on to describe the pull and haul, the arduous switching of gears, she experienced when she attempted evening graduate study while coping with the responsibilities of a full-time job. Various students testify to the difficulty of concentrating on course work after a stressful day on the job.

Further, while other institutions do offer MBA programs for men and women already launched on careers, almost all such programs require attendance on at least one business day of the week, and/or periods of being "in residence" during working days at various times. The Suffolk all-day Saturday arrangement not only offers the students coherence, but obviates the need to request working days off, or special consideration on the part of one's employer. One graduate of the Suffolk program found himself in an interesting predicament when he was more than half way through the program. His company offered him an important promotion contingent upon his moving out of state. He was understandably reluctant to scrap the time and effort he had already put in on the degree. As matters were worked out, his company agreed to fly him to Boston every Friday night or Saturday morning, and back to his new state on Sunday, for the number of months remaining for him to complete the program.

or is this alumnus the only example of commuting from an appreciable distance. New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Maine, and Connecticut residents are consistently represented in each class, and Massachusetts addresses from Worcester and beyond and as far south as New Bedford are not infrequent.

There has been a minimal dropout rate since the program's inception in 1975, which is attributed to the high degree of motivation on the part of the students. Some four hundred men and women have earned the Executive MBA degree at Suffolk during these eight years. If the casual observer finds the proportion of women to men somewhat disappointing, the women students themselves are quick to point out that the ratio will be improving as more women applicants meet the requirement of having had five years or more experience as managers. Students may enter the program at four points during the year. It is preferable that entering groups stick as closely as possible together, although, as has been noted, those who have already satisfied prerequisites are able to move more quickly through the program. As one alumnus of the program puts it, "No matter where you start, there are always a few people whom you keep meeting in the same courses, and they become your 'classmates'."

Among MBA candidates entering in the spring of 1983, none reported a salary beneath $25,000, while 84 percent received significant (more than 50 percent) tuition support from employers. Surprisingly few students enter the program with the objective of redesigning their careers, although in every group there are some students who wish to move out of currently depressed professions, such as education. The majority of Executive MBA students are seeking to enhance their current careers, and in the companies or institutions where they now work. One student remarked that, having invested fourteen years with the current employer, even an apparently attractive offer from another source would not be necessarily advantageous in terms of lifetime goals.

What most Executive MBA candidates seek is a "change of authority." One student with a solid professional background spoke with the asent of several others, "We are yearning to be in a decision-making capacity." Still another student contributed the observation that she was already being perceived differently by her supervisors and colleagues even before she completes the degree.

The students delight in the remarkable variety of backgrounds they find among their fellows. Small groups of students voluntarily establish study groups, such as are common among law students, devoting one, if not two evenings a week (and often driving considerable distances after a full day's work) to supportive small group conferences held at one another's homes. There is, in the words of a current student, "A low boredom level." Perhaps not surprisingly, the Executive MBA students have a particularly lively student advisory board of their own, which has the enthusiastic support of the Dean and the faculty.

One important spin-off from being in the program, according to several students, is that one learns time management, whether one had planned to or not. There is that full-time job as National Sales Manager, Assistant Vice President, Medical Records Administrator, Sales Representative, Assistant Commissioner, Market Research Analyst, Senior Buyer, C.P.A., Comptroller, or even company president. There is home. There are all the ordinary obligations of life. There is class preparation, formerly known as homework. And there is the knowledge that you must arrive at the Sawyer Building on Ashburton Place prior to 8:30 on Saturday morning, while the stores will likely be closing as you leave for the day.

While formal efforts to obtain evaluations by employers of graduates of the Executive MBA program have not been made, it is possible to measure some degree of the acceptance the program has in the business world by noting the companies whose names consistently appear as employers. A partial list of companies that continue to support their "managers on the move" at Suffolk would have to include: Arthur D. Little; Bank of Boston; Bank of New England; Chrysler Corporation; Digital; Draper Laboratories; The Foxboro Company; General Electric; General Motors; GTE/Sylvania; Howard Johnson; H.P. Hood; John Hancock Insurance; Monsanto Industrial Chemicals; Mutual of New York; New England Telephone; Norton Company; Prime Computer; Shawmut Bank; Stone and Webster Engineering; Stop and Shop; Western Electric; W.R. Grace; and Zayre. A goodly number of students are employed in administrative positions in area hospitals, in school systems and in wholesale and retail industries. Even the MBTA and the armed forces show up as employers.

Another often remarked upon advantage of the Suffolk program is the presence of faculty who are oriented to the practice of the subjects they teach. An alumnus of the program speaks enthusiastically of having studied inventory management with the plant manager of a large industrial facility, and organizational behavior with a bank vice president whose background included psychology, training for the ministry, and an advanced degree in business. Students frequently express satisfaction with being able to take back to work on Monday insights and approaches acquired on Saturday through animated discussion with fellow students and teachers. Conversely, all faculty are aware that the Saturday students are not there to be introduced to the hypothetical. The dual situation is stimulating to both sides of the desk and the word "pracademics" is an admirable description of this working amalgam of academic integrity and applied experience.
Bamford puts the pieces together

For thirty years it had been one of America's best kept secrets, an agency few citizens ever heard of let alone could explain. Yet, the National Security Agency, created under secret order by President Harry S. Truman, employs 60,000 people and is the largest intelligence gathering agency in the free world.

The man who took the cloak off this vital security organization is V. James Bamford, a soft-spoken 35-year old Natick attorney. His powerful exhaustively researched book, The Puzzle Palace, tells the story of NSA from its early beginnings, of its electronic eavesdropping and spy gathering techniques and of its huge 20-building complex at Fort Meade, Md. which Bamford toured and calls the “Taj Mahal of eavesdropping.”

Jim Bamford's face and name are familiar to many around the Suffolk University campus. He holds two degrees from Suffolk, a bachelor of arts received in 1972 and a juris doctor degree from the Law School in 1975. He also worked in both college and law libraries, stints that undoubtedly helped him develop the investigative and research talents that uncovered the many secrets of NSA. He doesn't practice law but began his career as a private investigator.

Bamford's book is based on unclassified documents he obtained from the Justice Department as well as reports from Congressional hearings, newspaper articles and interviews with current and former NSA officials.

by Lou Connelly

Among the disclosures in the 465-page The Puzzle Palace: NSA buildings house more than five and a half acres of computers... the NSA's enormous basement stretches for city blocks... the computers, with code names like Carillon and Loadstone, are used to solve complex statistical questions involved in modern code-breaking... NSA has secret listening posts in Yakima, Washington, and Sugar Grove, West Virginia... it has conducted illegal spying operations on Americans in the past and because of new advances in technology has a greater potential for intruding into privacy in the future... the government has employed the NSA to spy on such anti-war activists as Jane Fonda and Joan Baez.

Bamford's success at penetrating the wall of secrecy at NSA began through discovery of a newsletter published for NSA employees. He spotted the newsletter among papers left by a former NSA director to a research library in Virginia.

Relying on the Freedom of Information Act, Bamford was able to pry from NSA some 6000 pages of newsletters dating to its inception in 1952. “There was one caveat in the newsletter,” he pointed out. “It noted that it was to be distributed only to employees and their families, but I pointed out that once they sent it to the families they opened it up to the world.”

The newsletters he obtained were censored but proved helpful to Bamford in providing tips to NSA's secret operations and offering a lot of names. Later, he was granted a tour of the Fort Meade, MD. headquarters, the only investigative reporter ever to win such a visit.

What Bamford uncovered certainly was no news to Russia or the intelligence network, but it was to the public. The secrecy of the National Security Agency prompted the joke in Washington that its acronym stands for No Such Agency.

But according to Bamford it is an agency very important and vital to America's defense and welfare. “As former Vice President Mondale said, it's the most important intelligence agency in the United States,” Bamford said during a visit to campus recently. “Some 85 percent of our intelligence is carried out by NSA while the CIA does less than 10 percent. The CIA is small compared to NSA,” Bamford says. “Unfortunately, NSA has never been properly monitored or scrutinized,” he continued. “It exists in total secrecy. It wasn't until 1975 that the Senate and House Intelligence Committees looked at it yet it involves billions of dollars and has an unlimited potential for spying on people.”
Bamford would like to see the National Security Agency given a charter or rules under which it can operate, although he doubts it will happen under a Reagan administration.

“That was done with the CIA. It needs good scrutiny. After all, if NSA can clear 60,000 employees for security, it surely can clear 20 members of a Senate committee.”

Bamford’s The Puzzle Palace (he chose the name because that’s what NSA employees call the sprawling complex at Fort Meade) has brought him fame. He has appeared on close to 100 television or radio shows for interviews. He’s been interviewed twice by Ted Koppel on ABC’s “Nightline,” appeared on NBC’s “Today Show,” the BBC and talk shows across the country.

He’s even been invited to speak to the State Department at an open forum.

But his painstaking research has also brought him a brush with the government, which before the book’s publication by Houghton Mifflin Co. demanded the return of 250 pages of documents from the Justice Department. Bamford balked.

“They were given to me by Atty. General Benjamin Civiletti in 1979, 10 months after I had asked for them,” Bamford explained. “They had been declassified.”

Among the revelations the Justice Department sought to suppress was a claim that British intelligence helped the U.S. spy on American political activists such as actress Jane Fonda and her husband Tom Hayden. The British electronic eavesdropping agency involved was the Government Communications Headquarters.

Justice Department and NSA officials and attorneys went to Houghton Mifflin in Boston in 1981 seeking the documents. Bamford refused and later consulted American Civil Liberties Union Atty. Mark H. Lynch, who advised him not to return them on the grounds that the Freedom of Information Act had no provision for the reclassification or return of documents.

“My question was how could the government make something classified when it already had been declassified as those documents were when Mr. Civiletti gave them to me,” Bamford stressed.

There were no efforts by the government to stop publication of the book and the matter eventually faded away.

Bamford says that former employees with NSA have praised the book (present employees have said nothing). “Almost all of them though it was a well-done book which helped the agency more than hurt it,” Bamford said. “They considered it a balanced book, one that will keep them on their toes. They also feel that it’s better someone like me wrote it rather than a disgruntled employee. What’s more, it’s authoritative.”

While the book is technically detailed and loaded with acronyms that befog the mind, it includes a number of fascinating historical passages and has won raves from critics. It was number one on the Washington Post best seller list and number 11 on the New York Times list. It has sold more than 90,000 copies and has been published in Great Britain, France and Japan. And, of course, there is a paperback to come.

“It will make a lot of money,” Bamford laughed modestly. Bamford spent three years researching the book and another year writing it. It is his first book.

“It’s sort of intimidating when you’re writing a book,” Bamford noted. “If they’ve heard about it at NSA, everyone clams up and then it becomes an interesting problem to pierce the aura.”

Bamford blames a “poor quality of reporting from Washington” as one reason NSA has been a secret for so long and hopes that his book has bestirred them. He constantly runs across people who haven’t heard of NSA, even people of political importance.

Bamford’s interest in intelligence work surfaced when he was in the Navy and read David Kahn’s The Codebreakers, a book about cryptology, which included a chapter about the National Security Agency. Bamford pointed out that NSA tried to block publication of Kahn’s book until a page was deleted. It was subsequently included in The Puzzle Palace.

At Suffolk, Bamford majored in government, was vice president of Alpha Phi Omega National Service Fraternity, and president of Pi Gamma Mu Honor Society. In Law School, he was a member of Phi Delta Phi Law Fraternity.

Bamford lives with his wife, Nancy, a respiratory therapist at Leonard Morse Hospital, Natick.

Success of The Puzzle Palace has kept him hopping, even transatlantically for flights to London where he is adding a new chapter of his book for a British edition. But it hasn’t stopped him from preparing a new book. The subject? Government, of course.
David J. Sargent is the sixth person to serve as dean of Suffolk Law School. He heads a school with an enrollment of almost 1600 day and evening students, a resident faculty of 50 and an alumni numbered at more than 12,000.

When the Law School's first dean, Gleason L. Archer, held the first class on September 19, 1906, there were nine students and a faculty of one. Archer's intention was to make knowledge of the law and access to the legal profession broadly available to persons of all ethnic and economic groups. His philosophy worked. By the 1920's enrollment at Suffolk Law School totaled over 2,000 largely part-time students with a faculty of 34.

By 1942, Archer's responsibilities had grown to include presiding over a number of colleges in addition to the Law School which had been incorporated into Suffolk University during the 1930's. As a result, Frank L. Simpson assumed the deanship and began to institute a series of innovations. Among them was a moot court experience which was required of all students. The Law School achieved ABA accreditation, largely as a result of efforts made by Dean Simpson and by University Treasurer, Life Trustee, and Massachusetts Superior Court Justice, Frank J. Donahue.

Dean Simpson was succeeded by John F.X. O'Brien, who was in turn succeeded by Frederick A. McDermott in 1956. Dean McDermott created a pioneering legal internship program with the Middlesex County District Attorney's Office, the first of many such training programs. Law clerkships became a regular feature for upperclassmen. An estate planning contest was introduced in 1957, along with a moot appellate court competition and national moot court competition for second- and third-year students. Subsequently, the moot appellate court competition was named in honor of Supreme Court Justice Tom C. Clark. A Student Bar Association was founded in 1959.

Dean Donald R. Simpson (1964-1972), son of the earlier Dean Simpson, added two criminal law programs to the curriculum, the Voluntary Defenders and the Voluntary Prosecutors, during the late 1960's. These programs permitted Suffolk Law students to function as public defenders or as assistant district attorneys in a number of district courts in the Greater Boston area. A Law Review and a legal magazine, The Advocate, were also established under the deanship of Donald Simpson.

Dean Sargent became a full-time member of the Law School faculty in 1957, three years after his own graduation. In 1973 he became the first Suffolk Law School graduate to assume the deanship on a permanent basis. Five years later, in 1978, the University awarded him an honorary doctor of law degree, a testament to the respect in which he is held by the Suffolk community. Since Dean Sargent became dean, the Law School's reputation has been further enhanced among lawyers, legal educators and potential students.

Suffolk University Law School's stature was recognized by the Association of American Law Schools in 1977 when the Association granted full membership to the School.

Under Dean Sargent, Suffolk University Law School, in addition to its innovative programs, increased faculty research and elective courses, has maintained its traditional emphasis on effective teaching, a strong core of required subjects and a practical approach to legal education that permits students to be rapidly assimilated into the legal profession.

In the last decade, more than three hundred graduates have won clerkships in state and federal courts nationwide. Suffolk has fielded national teams in all areas offering moot court competition and one team has won the Albert Mugel Moot Court National Tax Competition. Presently, women represent 45% of enrollment, in contrast to 10% in 1973, and 48% of current day enrollment report home addresses outside of Massachusetts. Today Suffolk University Law School is an outstanding regional law school with increasing national recognition.
Class of 1983 graduate

Suffolk University conferred a total of 588 degrees on graduates of its College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and School of Management and awarded 484 Juris Doctor degrees to Law School graduates at separate exercises at John B. Hynes Veterans' Auditorium on Sunday, June 12.

Secretary of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Margaret M. Heckler delivered the commencement address to Law School graduates at the morning program and received an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

At the afternoon exercises, Dr. Lawrence A. Cremin, president of Teachers College, Columbia University, a Pulitzer Prize winning education author, addressed the University's Liberal Arts and Sciences and Management graduates. He received an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

President Daniel H. Perlman awarded the degrees at both exercises. In addition to degrees to Heckler and Cremin, the President bestowed honorary degrees on the following: the Honorable Matthew Brown, senior partner in the Boston law firm of Brown, Rudnick, Freed & Gesmer, Chief Justice Vincent L. McKusick of the Maine Supreme Judicial Court and Associate Justice Francis P. O'Connor of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, Doctor of Laws degrees; David J. Mahoney, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Norton Simon, Inc., Doctor of Commercial Science; Dr. Thomas S. Durant, associate director of the Massachusetts General Hospital, Doctor of Humane Letters; and author-novelist Ann Petry, Doctor of Letters.

Among the earned degree recipients was 82-year old Rosalie L. Warren of Boston's West End, who received a Master of Education degree. Three years ago, on the same stage, Mrs. Warren received a Bachelor of Science degree magna cum laude.

The oldest woman ever to receive a degree from the University, Mrs. Warren attended Suffolk under the University's free tuition program for senior citizens. Suffolk was the first New England college or university to establish such a program, and to date, nine persons have earned bachelor's degrees.

An Austrian mother, A. Maria L. (Stoeger) McGuire, now living in Roslindale with her two children, graduated summa cum laude with a Bachelor of Arts degree. During the year, she was a certificate of merit winner in philosophy for outstanding honors.

Law School Dean David J. Sargent awarded the Daniel J. Fern Awards (named for a 1931 law school alumnus) to Elizabeth Nevins Mulvey of Boston, outstanding day student, and to Mary Elizabeth Keane, also of Boston, top evening student.

Dean Sargent also awarded the Distinguished Student Award to Joseph J. Lambert of Charlestown, cum laude graduate and editor-in-chief of the Suffolk Law Review. Lambert addressed his graduating class.

The Leo Wyman Award, named for a late Law School professor and 1918 graduate of the Law School, went to Maria DiOrio-Dwyer of Boston.

In the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, Dean Michael R. Ronayne presented a $1500 trustee graduate scholarship to Cheryl Ludwig of Roslindale, who received her Bachelor of Arts degree magna cum laude. The Martin J. Flaherty memorial prize for excellence in journalism went to Carol Caramanica of Quincy, who received her Bachelor of Science in Journalism degree summa cum laude.

Serving as class marshal for the Law School exercises was Atty. Efthemios J. Bentas, JD '58 of Boston. Marshal for the afternoon exercises was Richard W. Novak, BSBA '58 of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania.

Law School alumni association for Metropolitan New York founded

A Law School alumni association for Metropolitan New York was founded this past November in New York State: the Suffolk Law School Association of Metropolitan New York, Inc. The association is a not-for-profit corporation which represents the nearly 450 alumni in the tri-state area who are within a 100-mile radius of New York City.

The Association was founded to promote social and professional interaction among alumni; to foster scholarship and educational excellence through endowments and gifts; to enhance the reputation and presence of the Law School in the nation's premier legal community; and to increase communication between and among alumni and the Law School.

The Association's First Annual Dinner was held in New York City on April 28, 1983 and featured the former Deputy Attorney General of the United States, Judge Harold R. Tyler, Jr., as the guest of honor and speaker. The dinner was attended by over 90 alumni as well as a Law School and University delegation headed by Dean David J. Sargent and University Vice President for Institutional Advancement Joseph M. Kelley. Judge Tyler was inducted as the Association's first Honorary Member and was presented a rare antique book as a token of its appreciation for his outstanding speech that evening.

To date, nearly 100 alumni have become dues-paying members of the Association and 60 of them have expressed an interest in serving on one of the Association's four committees (activities, admissions, fund raising and placement) which have been established to assist the Law School in the Metropolitan area.

The Association will be hosting a cocktail reception this fall for new alumni in the Metropolitan area and will present at that function its newly established...
Suffolk University Law School sponsored its fifth annual United States Supreme Court Bar Admissions Program this spring. A capacity group participated in the weekend of activities which included two receptions and culminated in the Monday morning admissions followed by a luncheon for new admittees. Massachusetts Congressman Nicholas Mavroules (6th District) was the luncheon guest speaker. The alumni/development office coordinated the weekend activities with the close cooperation of the Washington, D.C. law alumni group. Shown above are Law School alumni immediately following the admissions ceremony.

Moot Court team takes top honors

A Suffolk University Law School Moot Court team captured national top honors in the Giles Rich Moot Court Competition, sponsored by the American Patent Law Association, in Washington, D.C. this spring. The winning team of Cathy Thompson of Danvers and Linda Johnson of Boston won the national championship defeating representatives from Southwestern University Law School of Los Angeles, the University of Cincinnati Law School and Marquette Law School in the final round. They advanced to the finals by arguing both sides of the question of whether the issuance of a chemical patent was valid. There were over thirty teams involved in the regional and national phases of the competition.

The Giles Rich Competition is named in honor of Giles Rich Sutherland, a circuit judge of the United States Court of Appeals and one of the foremost experts in patent law. The competition celebrated its tenth anniversary this year. Suffolk's winning team advanced to nationals by defeating representatives from the University of Maine, Albany University Law School and Rutgers University Law School, all regional competitors. Judges for the competition were Circuit Judge Daniel Friedman of the U.S. Court of Appeals, Judge Robert Seto of the U.S. Claims Court and Giles Rich Sutherland, who served as the presiding judge.
CLE program announced

During the 1983-1984 academic year, the faculty committee on continuing legal education will present three programs for practicing lawyers at Suffolk University Law School. Each program will include a luncheon and a course book of the materials to be used in the program. In addition to lectures by experts, each program will also include opportunities for discussion and analysis of practical problems. Tuition for each program is $75.

On Saturday, November 12, 1983, a workshop on handling section 1983 claims will focus on suing towns and cities for injuries done by officials, employees and persons acting under color of state law. Professors Gerard J. Clark, Joseph Glannon and Karen Blum will examine current issues involved in such suits, including a discussion of coordinate state tort remedies. Attorney J. Harold Flannery of Foley, Hoag and Eliot will examine the suit against the municipality. Attorney Stephen P. Perlmutter of the Boston City Corporate Council's Office will discuss attorney's fees. A panel discussion will focus on practical issues.

The second program of the year is scheduled for Saturday, March 10, 1984. The Law School will present a workshop on real estate law, focusing on current problems in condominium law, leasing, land use and zoning. Professors Barry Brown, Richard M. Perlmutter and Bernard V. Keenan will lecture. In addition, condominium expert, Marshall Davis, will join Diane C. Tillotson, JD '78 of the firm of Hemenway and Barnes as faculty members for this program.

On Saturday, May 12, 1984, a program on tax problems and solutions in the general practice of law will examine issues relating to tax problems in divorce law, real estate transactions, small business practice, and estate and probate practice. Workshop lecturers will be members of the tax faculty at the Law School, Professors Corbett, Kingsley, Sherman and O'Donovan.

For further information write to Professor Charles Kindregan, Suffolk University Law School, 41 Temple Street, Boston, MA 02114.

Happy 10/Happy 35, School of Management

The School of Management will celebrate two milestones this coming year. The MBA program will complete its 35th year and the MPA program its 10th.

As part of this on-going celebration, the School is again planning an ambitious schedule of lectures. Dean Richard L. McDowell has invited a number of distinguished individuals and leaders from the business, government and academic arenas. In keeping with the anniversaries, the speakers will present their views relative to competition in business, government and education as it applies to their particular operation.

The School of Management continues to offer five different lecture platforms: DIALOGUE, the Distinguished Speaker Series, the Distinguished Alumni Series, Viewpoint 83/84, and the Business/Government Forums.

The fall lecture series commences on Saturday, September 10th. The October lecture features Frank E. Morris, Attorney Stephen P. Perlmutter of the Boston City Corporate Council's Office will discuss attorney's fees. A panel discussion will focus on practical issues.

Full and adjunct faculty members in the School of Management will be presenting DIALOGUES throughout the academic year reflecting their views relative to their teaching, research and consulting interests. A calendar of topics and dates will be available in September.

Plans are currently under way for the 1983/84 Business/Government Breakfast Forums. Since the fall of 1980, the School has been providing the Suffolk University community, students, faculty and alumni, and members of the business, government and academic communities in Greater Boston, with a better understanding of current issues involving business-government relations. Possible topics will deal with the regulation of the telecommunications industry and the insurance industry.

The School of Management welcomes and encourages participation in all of its lecture series. For more information about the fall schedule please contact Karen E. Connor, professional relations officer for the School of Management at (617) 723-4700, extension 309.

GAA gives awards

For the past several years, the General Alumni Association (GAA) has recognized special members of the alumni for contributions to the University and to society. This year, the GAA awards committee was co-chaired by Roland E. Vanaria, BS'70, DDS and Thomas A. Cady, BA'72 and is making three presentations.

The Alumni Achievement Award goes to an individual who has made significant accomplishments in his or her field. The recipient is Sandra McAllister, BS'65, PhD, dean of students at Stonehill College in Easton. Affiliated with Stonehill College for the past 17 years as professor, department chairperson and administrator, Dr. McAllister still teaches two classes per week in addition to her duties as dean.

Dr. McAllister is an energetic woman who has many interests including scuba diving, maintaining her pilot's license and teaching a CPR course. She was recommended for the award by Dr. Arthur J. West II, BS'51, MA'56, who considers her to be, "one of the outstanding women graduates of Suffolk who has shown a great deal of independence in seeking opportunities in the academic world."

Kenneth Sherman, BS'54, PhD of Peacedale, Rhode Island, is being honored as the Outstanding Alumni of the Year. He is a senior scientist with the U.S. National Marine Fisheries and director of the Narragansett, Rhode Island laboratories. In addition, he is director of the Marine Management and Assessment Program (MARMAP), an agency which tracks fish migration and directs the U.S. fishing fleet to those areas. He holds a PhD from the University of Krakow in Poland.

The holder of an honorary degree from Suffolk University, Dr. Sherman has been a special guest lecturer under funding from the National Science Foundation and has arranged internships for Suffolk students at his Narragansett laboratory.

The Honorable Joel M. Pressman, BA'63, JD'65 is receiving the Award of Excellence because of his outstanding public service. He is currently director of the Massachusetts Industrial Accident Board. Prior to this, he served four consecutive terms as mayor of Chelsea. Once a member of the Attorney General's staff, Mr. Pressman's other affiliations include the MBTA Advisory Board, the Metropolitan Area Planning Council, the Local Government Advisory Council and the Massachusetts Bar Association. Mr. Pressman resides in Chelsea.

It is anticipated that formal presentation of the awards will be made in the early fall.

Education department announces program

The Counseling and Human Relations Faculty of the Education Department has announced a new track leading to a Master of Science Degree in School Counseling and Mental Health Counseling. Inquiries may be directed to Dr. Glen A. Eskedal at 723-4700 extension 228.

University announces new trustees

Suffolk University has two new members on its Board of Trustees.

Voted to five-year terms were Thomas R. Walsh of Canton, president and chief executive officer of C. Walsh Movers, Boston and Dr. Harry Zohn, AB'46, professor of Germanic studies at Brandeis University.

Dr. Zohn previously served a three-year restricted term as an elected alumni representative on the Suffolk Board of Trustees from 1978 to 1981. In addition to his degree from Suffolk University, he holds a master's degree from Clark University and an MA and PhD from Harvard University. He was the first Suffolk University graduate to earn a PhD.

Dr. Zohn has served on the Brandeis University faculty for 32 years. Author, editor and translator of 25 books, he received an honorary doctor of letters degree from Suffolk in 1976 and for 11 years was chairman of the department of Germanic and Slavic languages at Brandeis University.

Mr. Walsh is the owner of four Boston corporations: C. Walsh Movers, Thomas Williams, Ltd., an office and institutional furnishings corporation; Bayside Relocations, Inc.; and Recordkeeper Archives Centers, Ltd., which provides storage and retrieval of records for major corporations.

A trustee of Thayer Academy in Braintree and the New England Sports Museum, Mr. Walsh also serves as a director of the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce and the Greater Boston Y.M.C.A.

In addition to Dr. Zohn and Mr. Walsh, Dr. Gerald A. Lozeau of Hanson, AB'64, has begun a three-year term as an alumni-trustee elected by alumni of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. An educational consultant, Dr. Lozeau is associate director and vice president of Readak Educational Services in Acton. A major in the United States Army Reserve, Dr. Lozeau received his master's degree from Boston State College and his PhD from the University of Colorado.

Summa members attend dinner

With a gala Commencement eve reception and dinner on June 11, Suffolk University began its newest tradition. The formal dinner, held in the Georgian Room of the Boston Park Plaza Hotel and hosted by the President and Trustees, honored the members of Summa, the University's recently established association for leadership donors, and the honorary degree recipients for 1983. More than 150 guests heard John S. Howe, chairman of the Board of Trustees, welcome the founding members of Summa, thanking them for their generosity that is "insuring the vitality of Suffolk University and its bright future."

Donors who contribute $1,000 or more to Suffolk University during the fiscal year (July 1 through June 30), are designated members of Summa for that year. The funds made available by Summa members are invaluable to the University's program of planned physical maintenance and improvement, and also help the University to keep its tuition fees at a reasonable level for current students. All alumni and friends of the institution are invited to become members.

Patrons of Summa is the title conferred on those donors of the past and present whose lifetime contributions to Suffolk University reach or surpass $50,000.
Admissions office seeks alumni help

Do you know a talented and capable young person who is or is approaching college age? Would you like to nominate him or her as a potential undergraduate student at Suffolk University?

The College of Liberal Arts and Sciences/School of Management admissions office is asking alumni to help identify qualified candidates who could benefit from a Suffolk University education. During the past decade, a time when many institutions have experienced a decline in enrollments, Suffolk has grown from 1500 full-time undergraduate students to over 2200. In the last two years alone, the freshman class has increased by 50 percent.

Why this increase? Smaller classes and a demonstrable emphasis on individual attention are two of the reasons. Cost is another. In an era of high cost education, Suffolk University has maintained one of the lowest tuitions of any private four-year institution in New England. The tuition for undergraduate students for 1983-1984 is $3990.

Financial aid is an important factor when planning a college education. Last year, Suffolk University was able to award financial aid to 80 percent of its freshmen. Students were offered financial aid packages which could include a scholarship, a loan or a work-study position.

The University has introduced a cooperative education program for students in the School of Management and the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. Students are eligible for the co-op program if they have completed two semesters of academic work with an average of 2.5 or above.

These and other reasons—a modern learning research center, a campus ROTC program, a spacious library with over 90,000 volumes and varsity and intramural sports programs—make Suffolk an excellent choice.

If you know a potential student, let him or her know about Suffolk. The Suffolk University story is best told by enthusiastic alumni. Then let the admissions office know about the student. Fill in and return the alumni referral form or, if you prefer, phone the admissions office at (617) 723-4700 extension 71 concerning any candidate. The admissions office will forward an entrance bulletin and application materials to each candidate.
