A Job Well Done

The 1980 Atlanta Botella is over. The many months of preparation by those responsible for the smooth running of the area office are behind us. The workers and I felt a little sad and upset feel satisfied for those efforts.

One of the smallest units was a city foreign. Although the conditions were not ideal last year's Golden Anniversary Dinner, all agreed it was a memorable affair. The banquet in the Royal Thistle's Council Room was most enjoyable and informative. The evening was a success, with the Board of Directors attending in a large number.

Now that the office is over and the work is done, I hope and trust that you continue to work hard for the benefit of the Journal. The Journal will continue to hold high standards and maintain a steady pace, and for the JC, quality for making the JCJ this year a memorable year. It is now 1981 and here.

Revolution In Journalism

In 1980, college newspaper editors on the East Coast Conference were shocked when more than 30 colleges and over 80 college officials took part, marking the first college newspaper revolution, a bold move into a new era of journalism which will revolutionize the field.

Carl Lindbeck, executive director of the Herald, Times and Tribune of the Associated Press, and Ethos Association, said students may be a shift in the journalism "era" a few years ago, when students in the 1980 era were the same in the 1980s.

Lindbeck cited the growth in the field and said that the future lies ahead in this era where students can handle material and the value to the material can be expanded to help students.

He felt that the entire world would benefit from this revolution in the newspaper business and the journalism of the future. This was a great move into the 1980s.

Let's Boost Sports

When sports at Dillard Southern University would start enrolling the talented families in a comprehensive program designed to develop the talents of today's athletes and encourage the participation of the youth in sports.

The boosters will provide the financial support to help the teams compete on an equal footing with the other teams in the conference. This will enable the teams to compete in national and international tournaments.

The new program will be supervised by a group of energetic and interested individuals. Let's work on this idea and work ahead towards a greater future in basketball sports.

MUCH ADO ABOUT STUPIDITY

"The stupid phone!" And a moment later after consulting another source, Art Maloney, Student Council President, skeptically remarked, "The new Miss Suffolk, the Queen of 1957, is a college student.

The announcement, which was followed by torrents of applause, must be as cogent as it is amusing, for it couldn't happen to anyone else.

A student of the Fine and Humanities department, and sophomore, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Doe, and attending the college on scholarship. She was vacationing in Europe last summer and upon her return she went to work for a local newspaper as a reporter.

When asked about her plans for the future, she replied, "I plan to continue my studies and eventually go into journalism." She was asked if she had any advice for other students, to which she replied, "Never underestimate the power of a good phone."
Journal Editors Attend U. Conn News Seminar

Mary's Hill Publishing editors were among 25 journalists from campus publications who attended the University of Connecticut's first seminar for student journalists, which was held at the school on March 1st.

Among the guests were editors of The Daily Trojan, Stanford University's newspaper, and The Daily Princetonian, Princeton University's newspaper. The seminar included a panel discussion, a hands-on workshop, and a tour of the school's media center.

TV PROF

Joel W. Brooks, Jr., served as commentator during the panel discussion on the role of television in journalism. He emphasized the importance of critical thinking and the need for journalists to be able to analyze and evaluate news stories effectively.
