Gift to Suffolk Sound Investment, Businessmen Told

Every businessman who supports the Suffolk University Development program can be certain that his gift is a sound investment towards providing a solid educational background for thousands of young men and women in the years to come.

That is the point being stressed by George C. Seybolt, chairman of the Corporation Subscription Committee, and Thomas A. Fulham, vice-chairman of the Development Fund campaign, in their appeal for support from Boston business.

"Every businessman is concerned with the natural resources required for the growing productive capacity of our country," says Mr. Seybolt. "Our greatest natural resource is our youth — on whom the nation must depend for future leadership in business, industry, government and the professions.

"Therefore every Boston business has good reasons to support institutions of higher learning in order that they may continue with increasing effectiveness to send forth men and women who are clear-thinking, open-minded and willing to accept further training and responsibility.

"This is one of the aims of Suffolk University."

Mr. Seybolt, president of the William Underwood Company of Watertown, says Boston business has accepted the principle of sharing the cost of higher education with alumni, philanthropic foundations and the general public. He says that it has assumed this responsibility because it has realized that such support is an investment in the future of business and industry — and investment that will pay dividends in the form of:

1. New knowledge through research and skilled teaching.
2. An ample supply of educated manpower.
3. A balanced system of higher ed-

HAYDEN GRANT BOOSTS FUND

A $250,000 grant from the Charles Hayden Foundation of New York was announced May 26 by State Banking Commissioner John B. Hynes, chairman of a $3 million fund drive for Suffolk University's long-range Development Program.

The grant, presented by Edgar A. Doubleday, Foundation President, brought total contributions and pledges to $816,590.

The fund was also increased by a grant of $25,000 from the Permanent Charity Fund of Greater Boston.

Meanwhile, workmen of the Perini Corporation continued construction of the University's new seven-floor building on Temple Street, adjacent to the present building. The facility is scheduled to be occupied in September 1966.

The long-range program also includes the renovation of the present building and the creation of endowments for faculty and students.

Announcing the Hayden Foundation grant, Commissioner Hynes said: "This generous gift gives the Trustees and the administrative officers of Suffolk University heartwarming evidence of approval for our Development Program. It is sure to serve as a source of encouragement to our campaign leaders and as a powerful incentive to our Alumni who are now being invited to share in the fund.

ALUMNI UNITS AT WORK

Lawrence L. Cameron

John Z. Doherty

Arnold W. Olsson

All over the State — from Boston to Pittsfield, from Worcester to Lawrence — Suffolk University Alumni have been swinging into action during the last two months to help the University's program of long-range development.

They have been inviting the participation of approximately 10 percent of the Alumni in the Alumni Memorial Phase of the program, concentrating on about 700 of the older graduates of the Law School and the College Departments considered able to make above average subscriptions.

During the General Alumni phase of the program, which begins in September, the remainder of the University's 6,500 Alumni will be invited to participate.

For the Alumni Memorial fund-raising effort, the State was divided into nine areas, and a chairman and committee were named in each area.

Leading the drive are Lawrence L. Cameron, Class of 1951 as chairman and John Z. Doherty, Class of 1930, president of the Law School Alumni Association, as vice-chairman. Judge Frank J. It's Called the School with the Heart

SUFFOLK'S new $2.25-million building now under construction.

On the "back" side of Beacon Hill, between Bulfinch's State House and Logue's Government Center, a university which had its frail beginning in a Roxbury apartment strives to keep pace with educational needs in the new Boston.

An island of learning awash in the business of city, state and nation, Suffolk University is distinctive in a number of ways.

For the record, it is a fully accredited university, but in size—2500 students and a single building—it is something of an anomaly on the contemporary higher education scene.

IT IS AN expensive college which operates without a deficit, an institution known as "the school with the heart" because it caters to the sons and daughters of working men, allowing them to attend classes day or night so they may work their way through.

In the past five years, under the leadership of Dr. Dennis C. Haley, Suffolk has expanded its enrollment no less than 60 per cent, has found much-needed Lebensraum and has done much to repudiate its reputation as "only" a law school.

In addition, Dr. Haley has initiated a $3 million development campaign, Suffolk's first, to provide a new seven-story

"On the 'back' side of Beacon Hill, between Bulfinch's State House and Logue's Government Center, a university which had its frail beginning in a Roxbury apartment strives to keep pace with educational needs in the New Boston."

So began a story about Suffolk University in the Boston Sunday Herald on June 13. It described in text and pictures the University's progress since its founding as a law school in 1906.

Two weeks earlier a feature story on the University appeared in the Boston Globe.

The two stories, together with news reports of the $250,000 Hayden Foundation grant to the University, highlighted a month in which the story of Suffolk University's achievements and aspirations was spread throughout the state.

In addition to the stories in the Boston newspapers, reports on the work of the Alumni Memorial Committees appeared in scores of daily and weekly papers.

Such co-operation from the press indicated that editors heartily approve of the campaign on which the University has embarked.

Typical of the editors' comments was that of the managing editor of a Boston newspaper. Visited by a representative of the University, he said:

"You don't have to sell us anything. We've watched your program. We think it's a good one. The University is important to the progress of Boston and you can count on our co-operation."

Hayden Grant Delights Senior Officers

The news that Suffolk University has been granted $250,000 by the Hayden Foundation was gratifying to the Trustees, the Administration, the Faculty and all the Alumni who have participated in the campaign for the long-range Development Program.

But perhaps the happiest and most enthusiastic of all were three officers of the Senior Class. Thomas McDonald, president; Richard Therrien, vice-president, and Ruth Rydberg, secretary.

They played significant roles in welcoming the Foundation's inspection team to the University on May 13.

The team, comprising Foundation President Edgar A. Doubleday and three associates, spoke with the students after conferring with officials of the University.

"We told them what Suffolk University had done for us and showed them around the building," said Miss Rydberg. "We told them there was an urgent need for the new building. And when they had concluded their visit, we helped them get a cab."

During the visit, the Foundation team conferred with President Dennis C. Haley, Judge John E. Fenton, chairman of the Board of Trustees; State Banking Commissioner John B. Hynes, chairman of the Development Campaign; Thomas A. Fulham, vice-chairman, and Francis X. Flannery assistant treasurer.

"They made a close examination of the building and were given precise information about our problems and our plans to solve them," said President Haley.

"We were all deeply grateful when, eight days later, the Foundation informed us that the grant had been approved."

ucation that remains free and independent of government control.

4. An economic, social and political climate in which corporations can survive and continue to progress.

5. Increased public goodwill and improved public relations from a demonstrated readiness to participate in strengthening an institution which serves the community and the nation.

"In taking part in the Suffolk University Development Program, corporations will aid significantly in the creation of urgently needed additional facilities for improving the educational level of the area," Mr. Seybolt says.

Mr. Fulham, president of the Boston Fish Market Corporation, emphasizes again and again the unique and vital role that Suffolk University fills in the community.

"Because of its location, easily accessible to commuters and employees of local corporations and financial institutions, thousands of students have been able to work part-time and even full-time while studying for degrees," he stresses.

"More than 60 percent of the students pay all or a good portion of their tuition from their outside employment."

"Mr. Fulham points out that Suffolk University is a functional school that has remained true to its purpose in the 60 years of its existence: To provide a quality education to deserving men and women for the lowest financial cost possible.

"Suffolk University has voted to become a dynamic partner in the devel-

Alumni Excel in Public Life

Graduates of Suffolk University play a role of leadership in public life that is far out of proportion to their numbers and to the size of the University.

In Boston alone, the record of Suffolk graduates is impressive. The present Mayor of Boston and his predecessor are Alumni, as are the chairman of the City Council and a member of the School Committee.

The University is even more strongly represented in the Legislature and in the courts. Over the years, scores of Suffolk graduates have been elected as Senators and Representatives in the General Court. At present, 22 members of the Legislature are graduates of the University.

Some of the foremost judges in the state took their degrees from Suffolk Law School, including four justices of the Superior Court, the presiding justice of the Land Court and many presiding justices and special justices in the District Courts.

In addition, the clerk of the United States Court of Appeals in Boston is a graduate of Suffolk.

Three graduates are district attorneys, and many others are assistant district attorneys.

John P. Chase Named Trustee

John P. Chase, one of the leading figures in Boston financial circles, has been elected to the Suffolk University Board of Trustees.

Mr. Chase took the oath of office at the May 2 meeting of the Board. His term expires in June 1966.

Mr. Chase has been active for several years in University affairs. He received an honorary Doctor of Commercial Science Degree at the 1962 commencement exercises, and he is a member of the Advisory Council of the College of Business Administration.

For the last several months, he has been active in the Development Fund campaign as chairman of the Special Gifts Committee.

Mr. Chase was graduated magna cum laude from Harvard College, where he was a noted athlete. He captained the United States hockey team in the 1932 Olympics.

Mr. Chase heads the Boston-based investment firm that bears his name and is a director of a number of banks, hospitals and foundations.

He is chairman of the Economic Stabilization Committee of the Office of Emergency Planning for Region 1, which includes New England, New York, New Jersey, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

He holds office in several educational and business organizations.

opment of the New Boston," Mr. Fulham tells leaders of Boston business. "The Trustees are excited about the role they can see for the University in serving Boston in the years ahead.

"By investing now in Suffolk University, Boston business will be investing in the future of the city and its leaders of tomorrow, both in public life and private industry and business."
