Heritage Committee Honors Three
As Part of 50th Celebration

Three individuals who played important roles in the 50-year history of the School of Management were honored by the Heritage Committee at a special ceremony Monday, Dec. 7 at the University.

One of the three, Harold Stone, the late professor of accounting, was honored posthumously. His widow, Mrs. Ruth Stone, accepted a Heritage medallion from President Daniel H. Perlman.

Neither of the other two recipients, former Dean Donald Grunewald, and trustee emeritus Rexford A. Bristol, could be present for the awards program, a tradition that was instituted during the 75th anniversary observance six years ago to recognize outstanding contributions by faculty and staff.

Professor Emeritus Edward G. Hartmann accepted the medallion award for Grunewald, who had a schedule conflict.

Veteran Business Law Professor Ben Diamond accepted the medallion for Bristol, who is confined to his home.

Dean Richard L. McDowell hailed the contributions of the trio to the School of Management in brief remarks.

Bristol, a Suffolk trustee for 27 years, was a member of the SOM Committee for eight years and formerly chaired the University's finance committee. He also chaired the accreditation committee that first won NEACSS approval for the colleges back in 1952.

Donald Grunewald was the first dean of SOM and established a graduate school of administration. He set a departmental structure and separate governance structure for the first time in the college's history. He later served as dean of CLAS and was a University vice president from 1969-72.

Trial Advocacy

Suffolk University Law School is the new home of the National Board of Trial Advocacy.

NBTA, which certifies attorneys throughout the nation in civil and criminal trial advocacy, moved its quarters to Suffolk this fall from the offices of the Association of Trial Lawyers of America in Washington, D.C.

Founded in 1977 by noted trial attorney Theodore I. Koskoff in response to concerns about the quality of advocacy in the nation's courtrooms, NBTA since that time has certified more than 900 lawyers as either civil or criminal trial advocates.

Suffolk Law School Dean David J. Sargent, in making the announcement, said, "Suffolk Law School has a proud tradition of being particularly involved with preparing men and women for the trial bar and a larger than average number of our 15,000 graduates are actively involved in trial practice. I therefore believe that our affiliation with the National Board of Trial Advocacy is not only fitting but will further enhance our reputation as a trial practice-oriented law school."

NBTA President, Attorney J.D. Lee of Knoxville, Tennessee, noted that the connection with Suffolk University Law School is in keeping with NBTA's role in assessing the advanced qualifications of trial lawyers and emphasizes that NBTA serves lawyers from all parts of the trial bar.

When Suffolk University purchased the one-story windowless building at 148 Cambridge Street, which we now call The Ridgeway Building, from Stop and Shop in December 1967, it was clear the structure was marginal and should be replaced. President John E. Fenton sought and obtained approval from the Zoning Board of Appeal to replace the Ridgeway Building with a seven or eight-story structure somewhat like the Donahue Building, but the neighbors objected. They thought the building would be too high and unattractive. Suffolk University was sued by the Beacon Hill Civic Association and by a group of abutters. Unable to negotiate the dispute, the opposing sides ended up in Superior Court which found in Suffolk University’s favor, ruling that the Board of Appeal had the authority to grant Suffolk University the variance it requested, for the reason given: hardship to the University if the two-story (FAR2) zoning limit on Cambridge Street was enforced.

The neighbors appealed the case to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court where Suffolk University lost. The Court ruled that the Board of Appeal had exceeded its authority in granting the variance because the law specifies only certain very narrow grounds on which such variances can be awarded. Suffolk University’s request was not based upon a permissible reason. This was chapter one of the saga. It consumed about five years and generated a great deal of antagonism between the community and the University.

The second chapter was enacted during the decade of Tom Fulham’s presidency during which he made a concerted effort to bridge the gap, to get to know members of the community leadership. He served as a member of the Beacon Hill Civic Association and listened attentively to the concerns of the community. Responding to concerns about the height and the design of the proposed building, President Fulham engaged the architects who designed the new City Hall to design a building of six stories that would appear to be a group of town houses.

Much progress was made, but the antagonism and apprehensions of the prior decade resurfaced amongst some of the immediate neighbors. When no agreement was reached by the mid 1970’s, the plans were set aside. This much of the saga is chronicled in an interesting doctoral dissertation completed by an urban studies student at MIT about ten years ago.

Clearly the great progress made by President Emeritus Fulham toward resolving the tension with the community and with our immediate neighbors set the stage for the third act of our drama. Starting in 1981, we began working with the community to establish a planning process and explore the type of structure that would be seen as an improvement and an amenity both to the University and to the neighbors. We, too, obtained a zoning variance for our plan, but we too were sued by the Civic Association and by a group of abutters. However, rather than waiting for the issue to be argued again through the courts, we were able to negotiate settlement agreements, first with the Civic Association and subsequently, with the abutters.

Last month, after almost 20 years of contention over what to do with 148 Cambridge Street, the agreements were signed by both sides. Recently we held a reception for members of the Beacon Hill community to celebrate the signing of this agreement. It was an historic occasion.

Zoning law gives Suffolk University only two years in which to exercise its hard won variance. Last month, the Board of Trustees again deliberated on this matter and considered the need for the new building planned for this site.

It was the consensus of the board that the Ridgeway building should be constructed regardless of the outcome of our discussions about “Parcel One”. Central to the Board’s thinking about this matter is the urgent need of the Law School for more faculty office and classroom space con-

Afro-American Literature Collection Dedicated At University

Suffolk University, the Museum of African American History, and the National Park Service, cooperators in a unique collection of Afro-American literature, officially dedicated the collection October 15th at the University.

Calling the affiliation a "trinitarian endeavor, that should continue to flourish," President Daniel H. Perlman declared that the books, containing more than 3000 titles of black American writers, "should be in more libraries and on the reading lists of more college courses."

Dedication of the collection, established in 1971, and permanently housed in Suffolk's Mildred Sawyer Library, was held as part of the week-long reopening program of the African Meeting House, a neighbor of Suffolk University on Beacon Hill.

Perlman observed that the joint ownership assures the books availability not only to Suffolk University students, but to all friends of the Museum of African American History, to school children, scholars and people of all ages and colors "who want to learn the truth about the contributions of black writers and about the experience of black people."

Guests at the dedication included Henry Hampton, chairman of the board of the Museum of Afro-American History, Ruth Batson, president and director of the Museum, Dorothea Powell, site manager of the Boston African American Historic Site, State Rep. Byron Rushing, former president of the Museum, founder H. Edward Clark, Suffolk University President Emeritus Thomas A. Fulham, under whose presidency the collection was established, Suffolk Trustee Thomas Brown, and Suffolk Prof. Robert Fox, director of the collection.

A wall plaque, marking the dedication, was unveiled during the ceremony held outside the Sawyer Library. Following the dedication a luncheon was held and poetry readings given by poets Samuel Allen and Dolores Kendrick.

An afternoon symposium on "Black Museums: A Cultural and Educational Resource," featuring a panel of directors of Afro-American museums, concluded the day's activities.

PRESENTING COPIES of Afro-American Museum history to President Perlman at collection dedication is Henry Hampton, chairman of the board of the museum. Also pictured are Dorothea Powell, site manager, and John Burchill, superintendent of the Boston National Historical Parks.

tigious with the Donahue Building. By constructing the Ridgeway Building and by moving the various student service functions now on the third floor of the Archer Building (Counseling Center, Dean of Students' Office, Learning Center, etc.), into the upper floors of that new building (over the bookstore and the physical education offices), the Law School could then expand -- as it needs to do -- into the Archer Building to accommodate its needs for additional space. The matter will be formally voted upon at a forthcoming meeting of the Board.

Meanwhile, I am waiting for a composer to set our saga to song.

Open Enrollment For Health Plans

Open enrollment for University group health plans will be in effect through Dec. 22. As previously announced, the John Hancock Group Insurance Plan will be terminated as of Dec. 31 and current participants in that plan must select another health plan by Dec. 22.

Employees affected now have the opportunity to change to one of four health plans offered by the University - the John Hancock Preferred Health Plan, Harvard Community Health Plan, Bay State Health Care and Tufts Associated Health Plan. Each has sent information and enrollment cards to employees here.

Employees are advised that if they wish to enroll in a different plan, complete the enrollment card and return it to the Personnel Office by Dec. 22. Questions should be directed to the Personnel Office. Coverage in new plans becomes effective Jan. 1.

Employees Choose An Additional Personal Day

In response to a survey the Personnel Department conducted asking administrative and support staff members to choose an optional day off to replace Bunker Hill Day, employees overwhelmingly chose an additional personal day off.

Personnel Director Mike Roskelly noted that while Bunker Hill Day has been observed as a holiday for many years, it is rarely observed on the actual day because of conflicting class schedules. Thus, the University has submitted a substitute day.

Here are the results of the survey: An additional personal day off - 99; an additional day off in conjunction with the Fourth of July - 50; an additional day off in conjunction with another holiday (several holidays were suggested) - 8; and the employee's birthday off - 3.

Beginning in 1988, all employees will have an additional personal day off.

Toni Tinberg Promoted

Personnel has announced that former assistant Toni Tinberg has become the personnel representative with primary responsibility for support staff recruitment and coordination of the internal job posting/transfer program.

Meanwhile, Grace Elson, part-time office secretary in the office, is now training coordinator responsible for arranging support staff development programs and assisting in the area of benefits administration.

Have You Given to United Way?

The University is winding up its 1987 United Way campaign and urges those who have not done so to return their pledge cards. The goal this year is $19,800, a 15 percent increase over last year, and according to Personnel Director Mike Roskelly, keyperson of the campaign, "we're three-quarters of the way there.

"The key to attaining this ambitious goal is to get more people to contribute, even a modest amount," Roskelly declared. "By giving, you are helping to satisfy the growing need for human services in the Massachusetts Bay area."

Employees are urged to submit pledges to the Personnel Office. If you've misplaced your pledge card, call Personnel at 8415 and you can receive another one.

Holiday Schedule

New Year's: Days off - Thursday, Dec. 31, Friday, Jan. 1.

Cafeteria Holiday Schedule

The Sawyer Cafeteria will be closed from Dec. 18 until Jan. 11, when it will reopen.

The Donahue Cafeteria also closed on Dec. 18 and will reopen on Jan. 4. ARA extends happy holidays to all of the University community.

New Employees

Stone chaired the Accounting department from 1969 to 1978 and was a faculty member from 1947 until 1984. He was the moving force behind the post World War II accounting program and also designed the first SOM master of science in business administration program. Stone also played a big role in the establishment of the TIAA/CREF retirement program established at Suffolk in 1962.

History Chair David Robbins, who chairs the Heritage Committee, noted in introductory remarks that Stone's award was not actually a posthumous award since it was voted several days before Stone's death in July of 1985.

In an added feature to the Heritage program, Board of Trustees Chairman James F. Linnehan presented Suffolk University 10-year pins to a number of institution employees who have served more than a decade in their positions.

A reception followed the awards presentation.

Fred Wilkins, English — One of the leading authorities and chroniclers on playwright Eugene O'Neill, he organized and chaired a panel discussion on the famed American dramatist at the New England Theatre Conference in New Haven. Wilkins will also be giving talks on O'Neill at symposia in Belgium and Japan next spring. He still found time to write biographies of eight American playwrights for the next edition of the World Book Encyclopedia.

John O'Callaghan, Government — A busy tour of the lecture circuit this fall for him. He spoke on "The Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution: Celebration, Reassessment and Reform" at both Charlestown and South Boston branches of the Boston Public Library. He also highlighted the CLAS Seminar Series on Oct. 27 with a lecture based on his sabbatical research on the Burger Supreme Court and civil liberties.

Jane Ives, SOM — Presently on sabbatical and recipient of a National Science Foundation grant, she's also been awarded a grant by the Institute of Regulatory Science and has learned that Granada TV in England will use part of her research in a documentary on environmental management programs in developing countries.

Paul Korn, Counseling Center — He's just become a contributor to Butterworth Legal Publishers national newsletter, Heller and Hunt Law Practice Management Report. He'll be contributing to the "Insight Column" in this new monthly newsletter marketed for lawyers and law office managers who want concise, practical advice on how to solve management problems and improve the productivity of their law practices.

Joseph P. McEttrick, Law School — He was recently elected to a three-year term as a member of the Board of Trustees of Curry College, Milton. McEttrick will serve on Curry's finance committee and will continue as a member of Curry College Corporation.

Lisle Baker, Law School — He emerged victorious in the race for alderman in Newton's fall elections.

Robert Lay, Enrollment Management — He was the presenter at the Mass. Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators fall conference at the Sheraton Plymouth. His topic was "The Role of Financial Aid in Institutional Marketing." Serving as a moderator at the same conference in a discussion on student employment was Eva Adams, associate director of financial aid.

Bill Spellman, History/Philosophy — He's published an article, "Archbishop John Tolletson and the Meaning of Morality," in the December issue of Anglican and Episcopal History. He also presented a paper at the fall meeting of the New York State Association of European Historians at the State University of New York, Geneseo.

David Pfeiffer, Public Management — Is writing a column on disability issues and advocacy for a videotex system, Boston CitiNet. He says the system is accessible for those with microcomputers or terminals and is free to the user since it is supported by advertisers.

William R. Allen, Management — His article, "Conventional and Systems Approaches to Law Enforcement Management," is being published in the fall/winter issue of the Northeast Journal of Business and Economics.

Bette Mandl, English — Her article, "Family Ties: Landscape and Gender in Desire Under the Elms," appeared in the summer/fall issue of the Eugene O'Neill Newsletter. She also gave a talk on the Diaries of Anais Nin for the American Imagery Association in New York.

Robert Fox, English — He gave a reading and discussion on "Black Literary Movements of the 1960s and their Relevance to Black Literature Today" in a program at Brockport State University in New York.

Ruth E. Winn, Sawyer Library — She gave a reading of her original sea poems at the November meeting of the North East Popular Culture Association at the Sonesta Hotel in Portland, Maine.

Morris McInnes, Accounting — He hosted the second meeting of the Boston Accounting Research Colloquium, a cooperative venture initiated by Suffolk and attracting faculty from B.U., B.C., Northeastern, Harvard, M.I.T., UMass-Boston, Providence and University of New Hampshire.

The board also appointed Suffolk University Law Prof. Timothy Wilton as executive director and Roberta Hugus as its registrar. Their offices are located at 56 Temple Street.

"NBTA's goal is to provide the public and the profession with the highest quality representation and an assurance of excellence in the courtroom," Wilton said. "NBTA certification provides assurance to the public and the profession that the certified attorney possesses the knowledge and skills essential to the provision of excellent services in civil or criminal trial advocacy. It enables clients and referral attorneys to choose a specialist who is qualified by experience and ability to handle a complicated civil or criminal trial."

NBTA's rigorous standards call for extensive trial experience, a writing sample, a day-long examination, peer review, continuing legal education and proof of good standing in the profession. Certification is valid for five years and renewable upon successful completion of a modified re-application procedure which updates the initial information.

It’s been put back until the first of the year, but the one hour student-produced video presentation on the homeless should be something worth waiting for. Students Karen Lischinsky and Gipsy Man along with their Sociology Prof. Gerry Manning spearheaded this worthy project. It began as a five-minute classroom presentation designed to raise awareness and funds for the homeless but its potential broadened so that the tape will now include interviews with Senators Kennedy and Kerry, Mayor Flynn, homeless rights activist Mitch Snyder and Kip Tiernan, founder of Rosie’s Place. One of the enthusiastic supporters of the undertaking is actor Martin Sheen, who sent along 50 autographed posters to be used for promotion of the video, which is slated for January premiere. The Allison Lecture Committee reports that the 1988 Spring Lecture will headline Dr. Hernando DeSoto of the Institute for Liberty and Democracy in Lima, Peru as it speaker. DeSoto will give his lecture at an April 26 luncheon that honors the memory of Suffolk Law alumnus Dwight L. Allison. A welcome back this month to Karen Corbin, who becomes staff secretary in the Law School’s Center for Professional Development. Karen, who formerly worked in Institutional Advancement and later in production at Channel 7, is now married and the mother of two children. Consul General of Mexico Alberto Campillo and his wife, Diana, were the special guests for another successful Hispanic Fiesta orchestrated by Modern Languages Alberto Mendez and featuring music by La Fantastica Caribbean Band of Gualajara de Pepe Gutierrez. Margaret Collins Weitz of Humanities and Modern Languages has been invited to be a contributor to a special edition of SONUS, an international review devoted to music.

SUN beams this month on three Suffolk students, John Cristiani, a standout pitcher on Joe Walsh’s baseball team, sociology major Andrea Spears, and accounting major Patricia Powers. Cristiani received the U.S. Coast Guard Meritorious Award for rescuing a mother and child during a boat explosion at a Quincy yacht club last summer. Andrea, Miss Black Massachusetts, finished in the top 10 (unofficially 4th) in the Miss Black America competition in West Palm Beach Florida. Powers won a $300 cash award at the Mass. Society of CPA’s Annual Student Awards Dinner. She won second prize in competition involving 24 colleges and universities. Looking trimmer and slimmer than he ever did playing football for the Patriots and Miami Dolphins, Nick Buoniconti (JD’68) received the outstanding achievement award from the Suffolk Law Alumni Association at the annual dinner at the Park Plaza Dec. 3. Buoniconti, now president of U.S. Tobacco Co., does considerable volunteer work for the disabled. His son, Mark, suffered a paralyzing injury while playing football for the Citadel. Also honored at the law dinner was Mike Riselli (JD’72), a Washington, D.C. attorney and former deputy assistant general counsel in the U.S. Treasury Department. Mike received the outstanding service award. He’s a former president of the Suffolk alumni association in the D.C. area. S.U. Constitution Program Attracts High School Students

by Mark Crowley

The history and government departments at Suffolk University joined forces recently to launch what will become an annual event at Suffolk, an honors symposium for secondary school teachers and students.

"The Constitution: Past, Present, and Future," a joint project of Professor Agnes Bain, chair of the government department, and Professor David Robbins, chair of history, was a big success attracting more than 70 students and 15 teachers from high schools around Massachusetts.
Its success was also helped by the appearance of Attorney General James M.
Shannon, keynote speaker for the sympodium held on November 19.

Shannon gave a 20-minute speech on the Constitution and then opened the program up to questions.

"The central issue then became Seabrook and Pilgrim (nuclear power plants)," Rob-inns noted. Shannon addressed the issue of nuclear energy and his role as attorney general in fighting it.

Immediately preceding the address by Shannon, students and their teachers attended workshops on Constitutional is-issues that were led by various Suffolk faculty.

The student workshops covered everything from the first amendment to minorities and the Constitution. Each student attended five workshops during the day long symposium. According to Robbins, "the workshops varied from group to group, but each faculty member would introduce the topic and try to provoke a conversation on the issue." Robbins added that the symposium "exposed the students to Suffolk in a way that they would not have otherwise seen it," although he pointed out that the symposium was not intended to be a recruitment effort.

The teacher workshops were intended to address techniques for teaching the Constitution at the high school level. Bain explained that they were designed to "point out what the issues are and how to teach them. The different courses and curricuulum materials were discussed."

The whole event was such a success that Bain and Robbins hope to conduct it again next year. "The responses were nothing but positive from everyone who participated," said Bain.
