Geo. Laite
New Freshman
President

The new president of the S.U. Law School Freshman Class, George Laite, is shown here with his honor court. Laite was chosen by the Freshmen Class Council as their leader for the year ahead. The council is an organization composed of the Freshmen Class officers and is responsible for planning and conducting the activities of the Freshmen Class. The council also serves as a liaison between the Freshmen Class and the University administration. The council is composed of the President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and the Freshman Class Council. The council meets weekly to discuss and plan activities for the Freshmen Class. The council is an important part of the Freshmen Class and is responsible for planning and conducting the activities of the Freshmen Class. Dark Side Story

Cowboys, Indians, and the Silver Screen

The image of the American Indian is one of the most frequently portrayed in the world of film and television. It is often depicted as a noble savage, a brave warrior, or a cunning trickster. However, this image is often based on stereotypes and myths. The reality of the American Indian is far more complex and varied than what is often shown on the screen.

In the 19th century, the American Indian was often portrayed as a fierce warrior who was fighting against the encroachment of white settlers. This image was perpetuated by films such as "The Searchers," which was released in 1956. The film was a commercial success, and it helped to establish the image of the American Indian as a fierce warrior who was fighting against the encroachment of white settlers.

However, this image is not accurate. The American Indian was not a single entity, but a diverse group of tribes with their own unique cultures and ways of life. The American Indian was not fighting against the encroachment of white settlers, but rather the encroachment of the European colonists.

In conclusion, the image of the American Indian is complex and often based on stereotypes and myths. It is important to remember that the American Indian was not a single entity, but a diverse group of tribes with their own unique cultures and ways of life. The American Indian was not fighting against the encroachment of white settlers, but rather the encroachment of the European colonists.

Attendance Poor at Class Meetings

The attendance at class meetings held in February was very poor, with many more students attending than had been expected. It is important to remember that class meetings are an opportunity for students to learn about the topics being covered in their classes and to ask questions. If attendance is poor, it is difficult for students to learn and understand the material being covered.

In conclusion, attendance at class meetings is important for the success of students. If attendance is poor, it is difficult for students to learn and understand the material being covered.

POVERTY

of PURPOSE

The Massachusetts Legislature, contending topological futility, is about to be thrown in the berth of another gravity-mandated and original legislative creation. The so-called "legislation to delineate the Civil War Needy" is to be voted on by the first legislature in the country to propose and pass a novel measure. The legislation was born with great apparent promise, only to be blunted by a series of precarious turnstiles.

In dealing with the equally myriad of the economy needs of the public, however, the approach taken by the legislators has been to date premature. The body has been bent and broken under the influence of the Civil War Needy, and the body that has been burdened to pass this legislation is to mitigate the Federal deficit caused by the nation's economic situation.

The Federal government, through its Executive Order of 1949, the Higher Education Act of 1950, has encouraged the growth of higher education, and has recognized the need for the improvement of our educational system by the current inflation of college students.

These students have seen their financial situation improve, and their prospects for employment have improved as well. The higher education system has been encouraged by the Federal government, and the higher education system has sought to improve the situation of the student body.

The Higher Education Act of 1950 is an attempt to improve the situation of the student body. The High Court has agreed to increase the amount of aid to college students, and the current inflation of scholarships has increased. The Higher Education Act of 1950 has been encouraged by the Federal government, and the
situation of the student body.

But, then, perhaps the Legislature should be left alone to continue its measures. We have come to call for legislation prescribing such a singular purpose as the American Revolution, and we know what they are like.

Student Government Reports

The student Government in recent issues has published articles on the topics of the student advocates' roles in the nation's economy. We have seen a gradual increase in the number of student groups that have been largely lacking in a result, and this is always the result of the long-term involvement in which action is demanded, but frustrated, or rationalized by the year's success.

This year's student Government in particular has been active in presenting their arguments and perspectives in the student body.

The Massachusetts Legislature, in its new happenings, has been dealing with the issues of the student advocates. We have seen an increase in the number of
