Greenwood A.M.E. Church, 200 Myrtle Ave., Sexton Street, Boston, Mass., Oct. 20 - The church observance was held in the church, and the pastor, Rev. Dr. John T. Johnson, preached a stirring sermon on the subject of "The Church of the Future." The service was attended by a large congregation, and the pastor was warmly received. The organist, Mrs. Mary A. Smith, furnished a splendid musical selection, and the choir sang the stirring song, "The Church of the Future." The pastor's address was followed by a series of dramatic readings, which were greatly appreciated by the audience. The church was decorated with beautiful flowers, and the entire service was a fitting tribute to the memory of the martyrs who gave their lives in the cause of the church. DeMarco Earls, a 19-year-old Bronx native, was convicted of first-degree murder in the shooting death of a 15-year-old boy on July 4, 1966. Earls and his accomplice, Elbert Sandy, were found guilty of first-degree murder in the shooting death of the victim.

The trial lasted for five days, and the jury deliberated for more than three hours before reaching a verdict. The prosecution presented evidence that Earls and Sandy had planned the murder and had planned to rob the victim before shooting him.

The defense argued that Earls had been coerced into participating in the murder and that Sandy had acted alone.

The verdict was the second in a series of high-profile murder trials in the Bronx, following the conviction of James Tobin in the death of a 10-year-old girl.

The verdict was widely criticized by Earls' supporters, who argued that he had been denied a fair trial. They accused the police of planting evidence and of perjury in an attempt to secure a conviction.

News and political scientists can predict the neither, because there is no bloc voting among Negroes, and the answer is "no." Indeed, it is only among Negroes that the phenomenon exists. The most popular form of bloc voting is among the lower-income groups, and from which they have rarely voted for any political candidates.

All other bloc votes for members of their race are only a reflection of the political world that they live in, and it is not surprising that they are only a reflection of the political world that they live in, and it is not surprising that they are.

The Republics by contrast, have no blocs. There is everything. The government is one in which all political parties are represented. It is, however, by no means a question.

B. U. Republicans Hear Rep. Curtis

Congressman Lawrence Curtis (R. Mass.) in an address before the Boston Young Republican Club at Anderson Memorial Center in Brookline declared:

"America must choose. We cannot remain on the present course of impotency and at the same time adopt policies which will wreck a prudent fiscal program of the last four years which has led to a balanced budget, the halting of inflation and a stable dollar that has been of positive influence in creating a prosperous national economy."

"Now we are being urged by shady voices to adopt huge new spending programs and at the same time cut taxes. This can only spell a return to deficit financing with its inflationary pressures and further devaluation of the dollar. We cannot abandon the policies which have helped build the present prosperity and at the same time expect the prosperity to continue and grow.

"A prosperous national economy with a high level of employment furnishes one of the best weapons of a true foreign policy, of meeting human needs, although there will always be some needs requiring specific government help. The present great times did not just happen. Government policies were adopted to help bring this about, and they worked. That was truly a great achievement for the benefit of all the people."
