Allocations, nominations on COP agenda

By Ron Vieira
JOURNAL STAFF

With the spring semester ending soon, the Council of Presidents (COP) found themselves preoccupied during the meeting of March 23, both with nominations to next year's executive board and with an expected budgetary windfall.

After discovering in January that only $5,563 remained for club allocations, COP members voted to voluntarily limit expenditures for each of the 25 participating clubs to $295 each. In February, a task force was appointed to make recommendations that would address the budgetary problem.

It seems, however, that a new problem has arisen. Now that traditionally large money requests for funding club events have been curbed successfully, COP finds itself with anywhere from $2,500 to $5,000 yet to be allocated due to spring semester penny-pinching and money left over from last semester's events.

Suffolk student actors visit real-life characters

By Mary Crotty
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

The Suffolk Student Theatre is taking the show on the road.

Most of the cast and crew of Fires in the Mirror, the Suffolk Student Theatre production which will open at the C. Walsh Theatre on April 6, took a road trip to Crown Heights, Brooklyn, NY to meet the real-life characters portrayed in the play. Fires in the Mirror, directed by Marilyn Plotkins, outlines the 1991 Crown Heights riots, which started when a car belonging to the Lubavitcher Rebbe Menachem Mendel Schneerson accidentally ran over and killed a black boy.

Concerned that her cast members, 13 non-Jewish students from 10 different countries, be able to portray the characters accurately, Plotkins took them on the unique field trip last weekend. The students toured the Lubavitcher neighborhood on Sunday, March 19, talking with many witnesses of and participants in the events that shook the black and chasidic communities.

It was an eye-opening experience, to say the least. "I had never spent much time around Jewish people, especially [chasidim]," said Nyabumba Githongo, a native of Kenya and a member of the cast who made the 22-hour round trip. "Before we were rehearsing, I had trouble understanding the characters. But now that I have seen them where they live and how they live — and have seen that, inside, they're not much different from me — I feel so much better about being able to portray them on stage. I feel in tune with them."

Assistant director Alexander Lekic, even though he grew up around Jews in his native Yugoslavia, agreed that the trip gave him a whole new perspective on the play and the events that inspired it.

"The Jews I knew in Yugoslavia are very assimilated, you can't tell them from anyone else," he said. "I had the idea that [the Lubavitchers] had a closed community, so I expected to see people who were not into this world. But once I met them, I realized it."

Fires in the Mirror, expected to supplement $1,392 currently available for club allocations, showcased a whole new perspective on the play and the events that inspired it.

Cafeteria improvements on the "table"

By Ron Vieira
JOURNAL STAFF

A truck loaded with new furnishings was eased to the loading dock at the Sawyer building on Friday, March 24, marking the culmination of a plan to renovate the university's cafeteria.

As workers loaded the boxes, containing the rounded "user-friendly" tables, onto dollies and proceeded to roll them into the Sawyer Cafeteria, Director of Student Activities Donna Schmidt looked on with pride. After years of student suggestions and personal persuasion, Schmidt was able to get what both she and the students were after: a new and more comfortable atmosphere for students to gravitate to.

Schmidt claims that the new furnishings have it all over the old. The long, triangular tables being replaced were described by many Suffolk students over the past 10 years as "reminding them of high school," said Schmidt. As a result, she decided to see for herself, in her own visits to other area colleges and universities, what furniture students venturing into other college cafeterias ate, lounged and studied in.

What she found disturbed her.

According to Schmidt, the furnishings in Suffolk's Sawyer Cafeteria had a "institutional" look when compared to those of competing universities, where the tables and chairs seemed more "inviting, appealing."

Although some may consider the university's purchase frivolous, Schmidt feels that it was well worth the estimated $55,000 to $50,000 cost for a few reasons. She remarked that the cafeteria is one of the few "community areas on campus" where students can socialize, making such an area essential to creating, within the student population, a sense of campus life at a commuter school. She believes that the round tables, sporting a light, woodgrain finish, will be more conducive to student interaction, creating the feel of a "cafe."

Schmidt also acknowledged that competition among local universities for incoming freshmen and transfer students also influenced the decision.
Suffolk Forensics team inducted into fraternity

By G. L. Rizzuto
JOURNAL CONTRIBUTOR

During spring break, the Suffolk Forensics team traveled to Cornell University in New York to participate in the Delta Sigma Rho-TKA (DSR's), an initiation ceremony for the honor society of Forensics members.

They also competed in the national tournament which was held at Cornell March 19. To be accepted into the fraternity, one must complete two years of active participation in Forensics competition.

Suffolk students inducted into the fraternity include Tad Furtado, Mary Cunningham, Karen Cole, Russ Patten, Angelique Muller, Kevin Connolly, and Vickey Whelan. Of those that were inducted, Patten said that he is both happy and excited to be accepted into the honor society.

In the tournament, Furtado finished as an octo-finalist in the debate competition, and as a semi-finalist in extemporaneous speaking; Cunningham placed in the semi-finals in rhetorical criticism; and Whelan finished as a quarter-finalist in debate.

Cole, a semi-finalist in rhetorical criticism, found the tournament to be "a thrilling experience, breaking to semi-finals at such a prestigious event as the DSR-TKA national tournament." She also said that being inducted into the DSR honor society was an "equally fulfilling experience."

Patten, competing in student congress for the first time, said the experience was both exciting and different.

The team was accompanied by coaches Dr. Richard Kropp, the director of individual events, Kristen Ciolkosz, graduate assistant and Meg Gossin, also a graduate assistant. The team would also like to thank Dr. Vicki Karns for her support and encouragement — not to mention some really great lunches!

SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

John Berg, Dorchester resident and Suffolk University professor of government, recently published Unequal Struggle: Class, Gender, Race and Power in the U.S. Congress. The book seeks to explain how political equality and economic inequality interact to produce a U.S. Congress badly out of touch with the American People.

In Unequal Struggle: Class, Gender, Race and Power in the U.S. Congress, Berg looks at the different ways big business, small business, the labor movement, women and African-Americans are represented and concludes that some interests are more equal than others.

The book concludes by calling for members of Congress to use their positions to rally public opposition to the domination of our government by big business.

Professor Berg is also the director of graduate studies in the government department at Suffolk University, where he was recently honored for 20 years of service.

FIRES IN THE MIRROR

I saw that, although they had a different way of living than I did, they were every bit as normal as anyone." Fires in the Mirror was written by Anna Deaver-Smith, a black professor at Stanford University. To get material for her play, originally a one-woman show, she conducted interviews with almost everyone involved in the original event, from Rabbi Joseph Spielman, one of the leaders of the Lubavitcher community, to black activist Al Sharpton and revisionist historian Leonard Jeffries. The play consists of 31 different monologues involving 26 different characters.

Although Suffolk Student Theatre has gone out of the mainstream many times during Plotkins' years at the helm, Fires in the Mirror is something of a stretch. That's exactly why Plotkins wanted to do the play this year.

"I've wanted to do a play with both Jewish and global themes for years," says Plotkins, who is Jewish and who has a cousin of the Lubavitcher community. "But I had always hesitated, because we have so few students here [at Suffolk] who are Jewish.

"This play is so global, because it deals with hatred and discrimination, things that are becoming so prevalent in our society. Everyone is able to get into it."

Still, as rehearsals progressed, Plotkins felt a tiny something was missing. "Because only one member of the cast, a young man from Angola, has Jewish blood, I felt I needed to introduce [cast members] to the Jewish experience."

So Plotkins and stage manager Violet McCarthy made arrangements for the Crown Heights trip. They arranged the visit through Rabbi Beryl Epstein, a member of the Lubavitcher community who has conducted numerous tours of the community for schools and other groups.

"It was great," Plotkins said. "The actors got to see that the people they were portraying were living, breathing human beings. They will be able to bring so much life to the performance now."

That her words are true is evidenced by Heidi Gillis, who portrays both Rabbi Spielman and Jeffries in the play. Prompted by a reporter, Gillis, a Nordic blonde — tall, slender, attractive — shifts into character. She accurately captures Spielman's stooped posture and Eastern European-inspired speech. With only a moment's hesitation, she becomes Jeffries, complete with "black English" accent and mannerisms.

"I've studied the characters carefully," Gillis says, herself once more, "because it's important that we show the people as they are."

Cast member Suzanne Beers, who plays Rabbi Shea Hecht and black activist Richard Green, agrees. "Meeting [the people she portrays] is great. As an actress, I feel much better for having done it."

Fires in the Mirror pulls no punches. The hatred and uneasiness on both sides comes through clearly — maybe a little too clearly for some members of the audience. That's why each performance will be followed by a discussion period with the cast members.

"The play is going to start people thinking and talking about things they normally don't like to think or talk about," Plotkins says. "The discussions at the end of the show will give them an outlet for those feelings."

Fires in the Mirror will be presented April 6-8 at 8 p.m. at Suffolk's C. Walsh Theatre, 55 Temple St. Tickets are $8 for the general public and $4 for students and seniors. Call (617) 573-8282 for information.

The first batch of spring releases are a mixed bag

By Justin Grieco and Jennifer Michael

Hollywood unleashed its first group of movies for the Spring season in the last month. The films are all fighting for movie-goers box office dollars and with sales down from last year, the battle looks to be an uphill struggle.

Despite two ambitious and diverting releases, the rest of the competition is fairly run-of-the-mill. The following is a list of releases from the past three weeks.

Hideaway
This "other side" thriller is based on best selling author Dean R. Koontz's suspense novel. The movie has some decent computer generated special effects but in the end it is all just really loud and flashy.

The story centers on a man (Jeff Goldblum) who dies in a car accident and is brought back to life. All of this seems like a wonderful miracle but he soon discovers that he has mysterious connections to a psychotic killer, putting his family in jeopardy.

The daughter-in-danger is played by MTV video sensation Alicia Silverstone, who merely smirks her role throughout.

GRADE: C-

The Mangler
Tobe Hooper ("The Texas Chainsaw Massacre") directed this film based on a Stephen King short story and this is strictly for horror fanatic only.

A mostly campy flick about a possessed folding machine which gobbles up assembly line workers in a Maine factory.

The production values and poor special effects keep this from being a watchable low budget time waster.

GRADE: D+

Candy Man: Farewell to the Flesh
A solid sequel which thankfully never lowers itself to turning its villain into a wise cracking game show host a la Freddy Krueger. However, a tingling score, an eerie setting and a chilling theme can't make up for the unbelievable setting and feel that is missing in the movie.

The story goes to great lengths to make Candyman a sympathetic villain and for the most part succeeds with gripping flashbacks of his tormented past. The movie also tries hard to be a film in it's own right and not just a sequel but it totally contradicts itself in the end by treating the audience to another cliched ending which paves the way for a third movie.

GRADE: B-

Delores Claiborne
An exceptional human drama made better by intense portrayals by Kathy Bates and Jennifer Jason Leigh. The film is brilliantly crafted and examines the dysfunctional family without ever sugar coating the revelations with corny sentiment.

The film sacrifices suspense and scares in favor of acid-trip visual atmosphere provided by Hooper, not the typical relationship gone bad, but a Murray Murdock (Rowan) life in "Candyman: Farewell to the Flesh" a Bill Condon film.

GRADE: G

Outbreak
This is a film based on secrets the government hides and the people who care enough to dig them out.

Dustin Hoffman stars in this power packed film as Colonel Sam Daniels, MD.

It is a movie about lessons and commitment to life and society as a whole. Not only does it encompass the typical relationship gone bad, gone good theme, it takes the viewer on a journey in which he ends up questioning the likelihood of government secrets.

At many times it was far to real to believe. Viewers left the cinema with a way-to-go good guy feeling and without one morsel of trust in that the higher powers are out for our own good. Other big names include, Rene Russo, Morgan Freeman and Kevin Spacey.

An excellent flick that is definitely a must see.

Newbury Comics hits the web

According to Newbury Comics Interactive employee Ashley Serotta, the Web site will be a source of information about Newbury Comics sales and promotional events. However, the unique feature about the site will be information on the local music scene.

By the end of the summer, they plan to have a "full-fledged" store on-line featuring alternative music and merchandise with a special focus on Boston musicians. The goal is to promote and create awareness publicizing music of these local artists which will be available through the upcoming Newbury Comics on-line store, and presently at their retail outlets.

The Web Site will include "mini-pages" with bios of the Boston musicians, photographs, and information about their CDs. Also providing these musicians with an outlet for national distribution.

Serotta also noted, "There will be a small handful of bands to start out with and as the site grows we hope to

The future of comics as art, entertainment, and going on-line?

By Dena Barisano

Today’s comics are continuing to transform rapidly with no end to the constant changing in sight. This diverse medium continues to defy its exact definition, with some considering it an art form, and others marketing their products with specific images in an established industry.

Most of the larger companies producing mass marketed comics are venturing on-line, paving the way into multimedia. Meanwhile, there continues to be somewhat of an explosive growth in many artists/writers selling their own work. What does it all mean?

Comics draw from both visual and written disciplines, and they may very well be the new wave of the artistic medium of the decade, much like the music video revolutionized both film and television in the 80’s. Comics may become diverse enough, to continue pleasing their established fans, while expanding and drawing in readers with diverse interests from more untraditional baccies.

According to Ian Cane, assistant manager of Newbury Comics in Peabody, “The people who buy comics are very opinionated about who publishes what. Someone who has never read a comic book before, might find themselves open to a graphic novel or works of comic art. Generally when you say “comics” most people instantly think of Superman or the other super-hero titles produced by major companies including DC Comics and Marvel. There is already a large, established following of comic book readers for these mass marketed books.

The ten most requested artists for DC Comics are "Mass Ave.,” which is a reissue of an independent, quarterly, comics magazine. Currently, musicians who will give more bands an opportunity.”

He added that there are occasional exceptions, with adults buying a child a gift, or a child buying on impulse. However, Kane doesn’t believe comics are a spontaneous purchase, but rather something many artists/writers regularly pattern their work after, “I think comics can definitely become habit forming.”

Jef Taylor is the editor/publisher of an independent, quarterly, comics publication called It’s Only Comics. He agrees saying many comics enthusiasts do regularly visit a store every week, spending a certain amount on specific books as part of their “culture.”

Taylor said publications like his are trying to reach a people who might not have realized there are other comics besides the mainstream, super-hero offerings. A major goal of his continues to be, “To give people something they normally wanted. Trying to find new people who never read comics and say hey look it’s a marvelously rich way to express yourself.”

Specifically he cites the publications “Hate,” “Eightball,” “Dirty Plot,” and others carried by many stores. “But they are always hidden, and always dwarfed by the enormous volume of superhero comics.” He also acknowledged publications like his are trying to carve out a marketing niche for themselves, because currently there isn’t one. “The obstacle is trying to represent all the various images of comics as being chiefly for children or being shallow,” Taylor said.

What about the new information highway? Maybe Superman doesn’t have anything to worry about, but what about these new, independent efforts? Forays into technology are currently represented by the major comics publishers, and this may have serious, long term impacts on the industry.

DC Comics has a “full-fledged” on-line service now on, while Marvel has some limited offerings.

DC’s service on America Online has information about their current releases, upcoming products, old favorites, and other services for DC comics and their various imprints including: Verrigo, their mature readers line, Mad Magazine, Milestone Media, and the new Paradox imprint. There are also advanced on-line news and other special notices not usually available until the actual DC books is released.

“‘The multimedia field has become the hottest area for comic books,” commented Michael Leib, assistant editor of multimedia publishing at DC Comics.

This on-line service is being used by DC Comics to give their fans a chance at a “behind the scenes look,” and opportunities to meet the people who produce the comics they read. “Fans are absolutely loving it,” Leib said.

Fans of DC books now have the option of sending letters in via the on-line service which editors read and respond to electronically, “Readers love the rapport with their editors. Before on-line the only way to talk to a favorite editor was you spent $20.00, went to a convention and took a chance. But now you don’t have to leave the comfort of home,” he added.

Leib also feels comic books are a subculture, and people communicating on-line nightly about comics is becoming another emerging subculture as well.

In the future, he predicts they will be coming more together, “And in turn because of being on-line, people will be drawn in who were not previously interested.” He added.

He also believes on-line services like these will have a positive, growth impact on the industry, “Mainly because of the combination of people who enjoy computers and comic books.”

He also mentioned the high similarity of the demographics in these areas. Traditionally readers of comics have been stereotyped, although this seems to be changing as fast as the medium.

Kane commented, “In general they are usually male, although there are females. I don’t want to say it’s only a male thing, but I see more guys, between the ages of say 16 and 35.”

Taylor noted demographically his target audience most likely would continue to be educated people between the ages of 20 and 30.

Taylor isn’t familiar with the major comics companies’ on-line offerings, but feels the larger companies dominate the industry, and the major comics companies’ on-line offerings, but feels the larger companies dominate the industry, and the major companies might find themselves open to a corporate industry, or truly art forms unto themselves.

“Oh, I always thought that comics was an art form. The fact that people who write comics believe their stories are the art forms, which I believe too. They write specifically to entertain, to bring into different artists in comics come from doing other things, and evolving,” said Kane. “They want to create the art, tell a story with their art.”

Leib also considers comics to be an art form, “The ten most requested artists for DC Comics are "Mass Ave.,” which is a reissue of an independent, quarterly, comics magazine. Currently, musicians who will give more bands an opportunity.”

He added that there are occasional exceptions, with adults buying a child a gift, or a child buying on impulse. Ah, who cares...

No one went to Program Council’s Twister competition.
Old news, right?
Sigh. Yeah.
The issue of apathy at Suffolk has been tackled before, in this space, in opinion pieces by various Journal columnists over the years, in meeting rooms and student activity offices, in rooms set aside for recruitment drives, and in front of the Fenton building.
Sure, there are plenty of students who are involved here at Suffolk. They head up organizations, plan activities, attend sports events, in general do things on campus.
And they, like everyone else here at Suffolk, attend classes, do homework, and hold jobs.
College is a lot of work for all of us. Between classes, endless homework assignments, papers and projects, grunt jobs to make ends meet and pay for all of this, we’re all exhausted.
Sounds like a good excuse to blow off some steam.
Cheer on the Rams, try to beat the APO team at Twister, join the College Republicans and do whatever it is they do.
In short, have fun.
That’s what these student activities are here for.
They’re not an additional chore to add to your already overburdened load, or an extra assignment to wade through (although we have to admit, it feels just like that on production night here at the Suffolk Journal, but that’s another editorial). They are a chance to have some fun, meet other Suffolk students, and make your time here at Suffolk University a fuller, richer experience.
Sure, there is work involved in some of these activities, more work than any of us really have time for, but if we all get involved in the activities that we enjoy doing, there’ll be more hands to do it, and it will get done a lot quicker, and a lot easier.
And we’ll all have a lot more fun doing it.

Abortion: the great moral question of our time

Dear Editor

The Suffolk Journal’s editorial regarding abortion makes two central points: the Republican party is in trouble because of its pro-life position and the Christian pro-lifers are intolerant.
The person who authored the editorial must have had his or her head in the sand for the last fifteen years.
The Republicans won 3 consecutive landslide elections (1980, 1984, 1988) with a pro-life platform. Newsweek in its election recap issues of 1988 and 1992 pointed out that George Bush received about 60% of the vote from people who considered abortion to be one of the most important issues.
Did the Suffolk Journal miss the reelection results of November 8, 1994? Not one pro-life incumbent lost.
Robert Casey, the former Democratic governor of Pennsylvania, has pointed out that the abortion position of the Democratic party has driven millions of Catholics away from it on election day.
This should be particularly disturbing, considering that ethnic Catholics have been one of the strongest groups in the Democratic base.
It is also interesting to note that Robert Casey was not allowed to speak at the 1992 Democratic Convention.
We now know that “big tent” equals pro-choice.
As for the issue of intolerance, Christians, 99.9% of Christian pro-lifers condemned the horrible actions of John Salvi. Cardinal O’Connor of New York has stated that it would be better for someone who was contemplating shooting an abortionist to shoot him instead.
This statement shows his and the vast majority of Christians’ attitude against violence solving a moral question.

I wonder if the Suffolk Journal would have considered the religiously led abolitionists of the 19th century intolerant in their crusade against slavery.
Would the Suffolk Journal have considered the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. intolerant in his moral crusade against segregation and for civil rights?
Probably not.
Then why would the Suffolk Journal want the religious leaders of today to sit down and shut up when it comes to abortion?
There is intolerance and ignorance on the abortion issue, however, it is more likely to come from someone espousing the editorial position of the Suffolk Journal.

Hey, are you looking for love? Well I sure am. I'm the loneliest darn guy on the campus. I'll do just about anything for a little action—even surf through the Information Superhighway. That's why I'm now thanking God for America On Line (AOL).

I was strapped for time yesterday. I had about three written assignments to make up for Professor Plott's Integrated Studies class, and no books to do it with; so I looked up with my good friend Bryan outside BU's library. I was hoping that in this foreign environment, I could study a little easier, and a few girls would give me a double-take, and I could find the strength to go on with my hapless existence.

But that just wasn't the case.

Bry came up with a good idea. "Hey, why don't you try cybersex?"

"Cybersex?" I asked. "What's that?"

He looked at me kind of funny and proceeded to tell me about the wonders that any luckless single man could behold on the internet. He told me stories of incredibly horny women that just beg for it online. But the best part of all, it was completely faceless and anonymous.

"Great!" I said with a huge grin on my face. It was just what I needed. My dreams would finally come true. I could finally interact with members of the opposite sex. Through the miracle of modern technology, my identity would become nothing more than a jumble of electronic impulses and I would join the masses.

Upon logging on, I "walked" into the first few rooms that caught my eye, eager to meet all of these eager women. But, alas, the Sunnyz, and HYPYMNs that reside in the Christian Fellowship room weren't exactly happy to hear from a guy who was "looking for love."

Next came the Nice Guys Only room. But those Amish people aren't exactly what you and I would call horny...

After that I checked in to what my friend called my "best bet." It was the Sensual Talk room. Here there was just a huge jumble of erotic talk but there didn't seem to be anyone listening.

Bignut: "Hey, any horny women out there?"

One message read.

Smoothbee: "Where are you?"

Manly$: "Help! I need women!"

I think that you get the idea. There were just 23 desperate guys, and not one woman. But I was not to fret, because Bry had yet another idea. "There's one more chance," he said with an evil grin. "The Teen Room."

Here the tag names were ever stupid, and the conversations consisted of little

I was underlining my favorite passages from "Dianetics" during my bar-hopping tour of Disney-world. Sixteen tequilas later, Tinkerbelle sauntered over and sat on my lap, spreading her little fairy love danduff everywhere. I guess that "wishing on a star" garbage works after all.

Then, suddenly, it occurred to me that Spring Break at Suffolk was one week, not two.

Ooopsie!

Now I've failed out of all my classes, and will graduate about the same time that Kato combs his hair. So long, diploma! Hello, trailer park!

So, before I dedicate my life full-time to eating dog-food and watching old episodes of "Quantum Leap", I want to say good-bye to the only place I've ever cared about.

The only place that's ever really mattered to me. The only place I've ever belonged. The only place where you can get a can of Fresca and some spinach pie on Beacon Hill.

No, not the Psychology Department.

The Derne St. Deli.

I've said it before, and I'll say it again. The Derne St. Deli is the single greatest place on earth.

It is a Mt. Olympus on Beacon Hill. Whether you're just grabbing a quick cup of coffee between blowing off classes, or you just feel like watching that Gyro Meat Kronomotic Machine spin for a while, the Deli is a place for the entire family. I often take my two sons, Susan and Barbara, for a bite after their paper routes are done.

At the Derne St. Deli, they treat you better than family. They treat you like molly boshers and moo boosers.

I've spent over 700,000 hours in the Derne St. Deli, when I should have been in my just out finding a job. In fact, me and my wife, Rosa Lopez, were married behind the counter of the Derne St. Deli, during the lunch hour blitz.

"Do you take this woman to be your wife?"

"I do."

"Can you pass me a napkin?"

The Derne St. Deli, much, much more than food. It's a bone fide cultural experience, Potsie. Biggie walked "up in a stall" hanging out in the Derne St. Deli, I know such Greek sentences as "I am a shepherd and I am tired of you.", "Which daughter is your liking?" and "Would you like ketchup on that?"

Every time I eat a gyro from the Derne St. Deli, I am transported to "Magic Yorland", where the "Gyro Elves" obey your every command. You can swim in lakes of gyro yogurt sauce and rest along beaches of brown gyro meat. That ain't bad for three bucks.

I'd like to be buried in the entryway of the Derne St. Deli, with a plaque declaring: "Jim. I guess he liked gyro's."

So forget about the damned cafeteria. You're not only wasting your money, you're wasting your life. Rounder, user-friendly tables? Sometimes, the Deli is so crowded, you have to sit in other people's laps. Talk about getting to know other people.

The Derne St. Deli is the only place on campus I'm gonna miss. In fact, it's the only place I can ever remember going. All of my Suffolk memories revolve around large Italian subs, cans of diet Dr Pepper, and GYROS GYROS GYROS! Man, I guess I have selective sheep meat memory!

You can have the rest of it back! Gimmie the Deli!

Thankfully, I've made a deal with Nick, the owner and proprietor of the Derne St. Deli. A Derne St. Deli franchise is gonna open in my living room. Whooh! That oughta solve my late night gyro-fevers!

Join the Derne St. Deli, manmo line, baby! Gyromania is sweeping Suffolk.

So, I'll miss you all as I embark on my new life of sucking my thumb and cuddling in blankets! You've all been special to me, but I am especially special as the heavenly meat of a gyro.

Take it easy, Suffolkians.

Remember me as I was: a ponytail wearing Trotsky-look alike, not as what I've become: a monk of the heavenly meat of a gyro.

See you when we all reincarnate. Life #2? A door knob.

House bill plans major education cuts

By Charles Dervarics
College Press Service

The U.S. House of Representatives is finalizing plans to cut $1.7 billion from student aid, fellowship and other education funds already approved for the Education Department.

Republican lawmakers are taking the unusual step to re-open previously approved bills as a way to show their commitment to smaller government. The legislation would alter an education spending bill approved last year by Congress while under Democratic control.

The bill approved by the House Appropriations Committee also would chop another $1.7 billion from Labor Department programs to provide summer jobs for youths ages 16 to 21.

The largest student-aid casualty is State Student Incentive Grants (SSIG), which offers matching funds to states that offer their own need-based aid programs. The Clinton administration wants to phase out the program, but the Republican legislation seeks immediate termination starting with the $65.4 million set aside for the current fiscal year.

Student leaders criticized the move, saying SSIG provides a valuable incentive for states to support student financial aid.

“It’s a great federal/state partnership, but we always see it on the chopping block,” said Laura McClintock, legislative director of the United States Student Association (USSA).

The bill also would cut or terminate nine scholarship and fellowship programs currently funded at about $85 million.

Another program facing cuts is AmeriCorps, President Clinton’s national service program that targets college-age youth. Republican plans call for cutting $210 million for this program, about one-third of its 1995 budget, McClintock said.

Outside higher education, one major casualty is the safe- and drug-free schools programs, currently funded at $482 million. Congress reformed this program last year to provide more flexibility and better target services for children in high-crime neighborhoods.

Cuts to this program “is a travesty for dedicated people trying to bring civility to our nation’s streets and even better education to our children,” Houston said.

Members of the appropriations committee also voted to rescind $142 million from state grants under President Clinton’s Goals 2000 education reform program. The program offers states financial help to reach eight national education goals.

The committee’s March 2 vote on this package demonstrated strong support for rescinding funds in the House, but the Senate may not act so quickly, advocates say. The Senate “may have no stomach for rescissions,” one advocate said. This bill would move on to the Senate after a final vote on the House floor.

USSA is planning a major campaign later this month to draw attention to the proposed cuts. A legislative conference in Washington will include a rally at the U.S. Capitol to protest cuts.

The student group also wants to defeat any effort by the Republican Congress to terminate the in-school interest subsidy on student loans. Students currently do not pay interest on these loans until after they finish school.

The interest subsidy is not contained in the Appropriations Committee’s current package of cuts. However, it may become part of Congress’ budget resolution for 1996, Houston said.

“Once it gets in [the resolution], it will be hard to get it out,” she said.

more than “faces” made with the keyboard. It was utterly incomprehensible. So there I was, matching wits with GOOBER95, when a thought struck me. Why was I doing this? Was I so desperate, that I would attempt to track down some nameless faceless person in the hopes that they might be a girl, and then that they might be willing to “party?”

Yes, it is. But take heed, my fellow single people. Do not try this at home. It will only lead to heartbreak.
Lobster boil sparks animal rights protest

By Kristi Kingston

The Daily Texan, University of Texas

AUSTIN, Texas — Humor and rage, mixed with the smell of boiling lobsters, filled the air recently at Mick's Mix near the University of Texas-Austin campus.

Fulfilling a campaign promise, Wiley Koepp, who ran unsuccessfully for Students' Association president, was both praised and insulted for boiling and eating his two pet lobsters, Zoe and Squishy.

"I don't know whether to laugh or be disgusted," said Stacey Bryant, a broadcast journalism senior. "It's a funny situation, but it's kind of cruel. He's a good politician. He kept his campaign promise."

Koepp, an English senior, had promised to use the fee tuition and salary he would have received for being president to fly the lobsters first-class to Maine and set them free.

Koepp had said that if he lost, he would boil the lobsters. "Before I decided to run, I was going to get rid of them. It's kind of expensive keeping them alive," Koepp said of the lobsters he bought from a Red Lobster restaurant.

Koepp attempted to hold the boiling ceremony on the West Mall, but PETA protested the event and brought in members of the Campus for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) organization of People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA) protested the event and brought in members of the Campus and Community Involvement Office, who said Koepp had not approached the administration about holding the boiling ceremony.

"I went down and let him know that he hadn't gotten permission to do any cooking on campus," said Cheryl Wood, a student affairs administrator. "It's possible that we could have approved it, (but) he hadn't even contacted our office."

Koepp moved his lobster boil to Guadalupe, outside of Mick's Mix, where he drew a crowd of about 30.

"I'm protesting this because he's glorifying the death of animals in front of a group of people," said Niki Telkes, a member of PETA and an environmental resource management and geography junior.

Telkes said PETA had offered to fly the lobsters to Maine, but Koepp declined.

Koepp said he had reasons for turning down PETA's offer. "I decided against that for several reasons," Koepp said. "I didn't want to break my campaign promise."

Koepp also said he was not sure whether releasing the lobsters in Maine would be safe. "Putting them back in their environment after being out for several weeks — I wasn't sure that they could have caught [their own] food. I just felt it was something I had to do," he said.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION FOR STUDENTS GRADUATING MAY 1995 OR PLANNING NOT TO RETURN TO SUFFOLK FOR FALL 1995

Federal regulations require the Office of Financial Aid to provide loan counseling to all student borrowers who will not re-enroll at Suffolk University for the Fall 1995 semester. If you are graduating in May or September of 1995 or if you don't plan to return to Suffolk for the Fall 1995 semester, you must attend a loan counseling session. Dates/times of sessions are listed below:

Tuesday, April 11 1:00 p.m. Sawyer 426
Wednesday, April 12 2:00 p.m. Sawyer 428
Thursday, April 13 1:00 p.m. Sawyer 426

Evening students may attend evening sessions, offered Monday through Thursday anytime between 4:30 to 6:30 p.m. during the weeks of April 10-13 and April 17-21.

Please note the Office of Financial Aid has the right to withhold grades transcripts and/or diplomas for any student not attending a Loan Counseling session.

This is a perfect opportunity for you as a student to place a message in the Beacon Yearbook. It could be your opinion, a saying, or just writing your precious memories on paper. The cost is $5.00 for the first 50 words, $10 for 51-100 words, $15.00 for 101-150 words, and so on. Cash or check is acceptable. All checks can be made out to SGA.

RESEARCH STUDY ON BULIMIA

FEMALE VOLUNTEERS who are currently bulimic, age 18-45, in good medical health and not taking medications (including oral contraceptives), are sought for a study being conducted by the Beth Israel Hospital Psychiatry Research Unit.

Eligible participants will receive $60 for the screening visit and an additional $125 for each of two overnight stays at the Clinical Research Unit for a study on the effects of amino acids on blood tests and psychological ratings.

For more information: Call Christina Wood, Bulimia Study, Beth Israel Hospital, Boston, at (617) 667-2113.
At this time Leib is un-aware if any of the larger, independent comics companies are planning to go online. However, he doesn't think DC Comics and its major competitors having online outlets will have a negative impact. “The independents are always around, I think they will always change with the times.”

Leib also stressed online and future forays into interactive or multimedia will definitely not mean the demise of the traditional paper book. “As with everything else no matter how popular on-line becomes it will not replace it. Nothing can compare to holding it in your hands, 30 years from now you'll still want to hold it in your hands. That feeling will never be replaced.”

Another major trend transforming the medium has been the rising number of many self-published, independent comics publications. Taylor noted until recently it has been extremely difficult for many artists/writers to make a living, let alone work without creative restrictions.

“Self publishing has really taken off. Probably years ago if you had wanted to start a career in comics, self-publishing wouldn't have occurred to you. But now more of the people that make their living and who will be making their living in the next ten years we will have gone through self publishing as a stage of their development,” he said.

Taylor also noted many artists/writers start out self-publishing then move on to mainstream anthologies or small publishers like Slave Labor or Kitchen Sink. However, he also mentioned a major problem in self-publishing concerns getting capital up front to produce publications since production is usually expensive.

Another on-going challenge is continually trying to expand distribution of self-published work, in actually finding outlets agree take them into their inventory. If the present barriers are overcome, comics from both small self-publishers and major companies could draw more widespread readers, breaking out of their usual, long-standing demographics.

“I think comics are becoming more mainstream and accepted more widely in the adult world,” Kane commented. He also attributed a lot of the attention to crossover and commercial successes of everything from Disney’s animated films, animated shows on MTV, The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, and the popularity of Simpsons television show.

Other recent incarnations of comic-related material include the new film Tank Girl, and a documentary on comedians/artist/writer R. Crumb.

Kane also pointed out there are always around another art form will eventually evolve from the two mediums coming together.

Suffolk bats its way through Florida

By Ryan Foley
JOURNAL STAFF

In pre-seasons past, the men's baseball team was without a sufficient facility to hone its batting skills. The squad's annual excursion to the Sunshine State was usually when they were next to any winter kinks and knots out of their hitting.

So when Coach Joe Walsh was able to get his Rams some ample BP at the YMC Union in Boston, he was a tad optimistic over his team's early season output. And now, with results having been delivered, incredible may be a more appropriate term.

For during their seven-game Florida road trip, Suffolk players crossed the plate (are you sitting down?) a total of 86 times. Yes, 86 times. Do you think use of this facility will become a fixture in the future?

"I think our work at the YMC Union really showed," understated Walsh. "In the past we've usually just practiced. This time we were prepared, we were ready. I think we'll be using that facility again.

The Rams opened their trip—and their traveling scoring show—against Russian College in the St. Petersburg/Clearwater area, where the team played most of its games. Knotted in a 5-4 game entering the seventh, Suffolk scored six more times versus Hussan before the last out was called, granting the Rams an 11-4 victory in their South-of-the-Mason Dixon Line Opening Day.

The following day Suffolk duelled Salve Regina College and their run production hardly ebbed. Led by junior Darwin Hernandez who clubbed two HR's, the Rams won 15-8. Suffolk pitchers had looked undefeatable and in the eyes of many involved with the team, the 1994 season couldn't have concluded at a more inappropriate time.

The Rams had taken a 7-5 advantage into the ninth against the River Hawks before they tied the score and were ninety feet away from winning the game. On this particular occasion though, it was Suffolk's defense that came up big. Infielder Rob Zeytoonian barehanded a River Hawk grounder and tossed the winning run out at the plate. The Rams escaped the inning with no further hurt and eventually won the game on the strength of Mark Kelleher's 3-run homer in the tenth.

"This was our biggest win in three years," said Walsh of the 12-9, 10 inning victory. "This was the last win for us. We hit the ball all trip and we weren't going to stop. I have to say though, my heart was in my hand during the ninth inning."

Suffolk returned to Boston with a 6-1 overall record (their only blemish being a 10-7 setback to Salve Regina) and in their North-of-the-Mason Dixon Line Opening Day they stifled Gordon College 7-1, upping their scoring total to 93 runs in eight games.

So their offensive numbers have been just as offensive, yet Walsh still desires to establish a decent pitching game. "When we're throwing strikes we're good," he said. "When we're not were mediocre. I don't want to always out-hit teams. I would eventually like to win some 3-1 games. If someone can keep stepping-up for us pitching-wise, then I think we will be okay."

And several players have stepped-up thus far, much to Walsh's liking. Sophomore Rob Fournier (7 IP, 7 K's, 1 ER versus Gordon; retired 20 in a row versus Fitchburg) and junior Steve Loud (9 IP, 8 K's, 1 BB versus Salve Regina) are two such specimens.

"As long as the bats keep going we're going to give a lot of teams a tough time," Walsh surmised. "But we're still going to need that pitching depth."

"There's a lot of leadership on this team and these guys really believe in themselves. We had a season without finishing the job and it really left a bad taste in the player's mouths (a 9-8 loss to West Connecticut State in the ECAC playoffs). We'll definitely be there again this year."

Around the Campus
When the 1995 baseball season began Coach Joe Walsh was just eight victories shy of reaching 200 for his career. With his team's 7-1 start, Walsh was just one win away as of 3/24. Meanwhile, rookie softball coach Christine Carr was in search of her first career Suffolk victory....The 36 games the men's baseball team will be playing this season is the most ever for any Suffolk team. All of those games will be on the road...Assisting Carr with the softball team this spring is her sister, Kelley Carr. Kelley will be the Rams' assistant coach. Kelley and Christine were batterymates on Stoneham High School's softball team....The baseball's team record of 6-1 overall during their Spring Break trip was the best the team has ever done in Florida.

Tennis team hopes to make some racket

By Ryan Foley
JOURNAL STAFF

In the opinions of both the players and the coaches, the 1994 men's tennis season may have ended a little prematurely. At least for their combined lineup.

After beginning the year with a rocky 2-4 record, Suffolk would reel off five consecutive victories before dropping their final match of the season to Curry College. The Rams had looked undefeated and in the eyes of many involved with the team, the 1994 season couldn't have concluded at a more inappropriate time.

Coach Rich Levenson's team did indeed end last season quite torridly, and so the head coach is hoping this past brand of court excellence will carry over into this season. A good portion of that 7-5 team from last year is returning and so the 11th year coach is high on this team's chances.

"Most of these players now have been together for almost three years," Levenson said. "They have been involved in a number of close matches and they might be able to turn some of those close losses around this season."

Two integral parts to the Rams' lineup are partners Tim Kane and Ron Fallon. The duo combined for a jaw-dropping 40-5 record last spring. The lone senior on the team is Rodrigo Mendez, who hails from Chile. Last year Mendez was named for his Outstanding Contribution to the men's tennis program. Along with Mendez, Suffolk is brimming with other international talent. Yazan Shureideh from Jordan is making a reappearance, as well as Manual Balnori, a native of Spain. Rounding out the other returnees are Gregory Bacos and Anthony Sharp, who complement newcomers Bill Downey a transfer from Quinnipiac College, and freshman Tony Moriganis.

With a favorable mixture of both court speed and power, Levenson is hoping the '95 squad can continue what the '94 squad was doing before the season ultimately ended. "We could easily have been 9-3 last year," he stated, "so I'm optimistic that this will be a good year."

The men's tennis team opened their 1995 campaign on Sunday (3/26) in the Codfish Tournament hosted by UMass/Boston.
