THOMAS ROMPS 57 YARDS THROUGH CAMBRIDGE LATIN TO SCORE

HAVERHILL BACK MOST EFFECTIVE BALL CARRIER AS VISITORS LOSE

At the 28-yard line of the Cambridge Latin School yesterday afternoon, a 5-foot-7-inch tailback named Thomas Romp darted past two would-be tacklers, one of whom had already started a charge at the Harvard graduate. After the first Britain, the Latin School back was airborne. He did not touch the ground until he had covered a total distance of 57 yards, the longest run of the game and a run that was a significant factor in the 20-13 Harvard victory.

The Harvard team, whose record improved to 6-0-1, had to overcome a 7-0 deficit and a tenacious Latin School defense to win. But the Harvard offense was given a running start by the strong play of its tailback, who was named back of the week by the Boston Globe.

"That was a pretty difficult play. I was pretty excited," said Romp, whose name is pronounced ROHM.

"I was just trying to get a couple of yards and was thinking about getting a first down, but I just kept going and carried the ball into the end zone," he added.

The Latin School defense, which had 20 tackles among its six starting backs, did not have the opportunity to tackle Romp on his run. The tailback, who had only 13 touches in the game, used three of them to score the winning touchdown.

The Latin School defense was not able to contain the Harvard offense, which gained 320 yards in the game. The Harvard defense also played well, holding the Latin School to 161 yards until the last five minutes of the game, when they allowed 70 yards.

The Harvard offense was led by quarterback Tom Streeter, who completed 18 of 33 passes for 244 yards and two touchdowns. The Harvard defense was led by linebacker John Smith, who had 13 tackles.

"We had a good game today," said Harvard coach Ed Coan. "We practiced all week for this game and it paid off."
