Aid for foreign students being considered by SU

In a move reported by an independent Austrian news agency, aid for foreign students has been suggested as a possibility for SU. The move was made by a group of foreign students who met with the SU Administration to discuss their concerns about the cost of education. The students argued that the current system of aid is not adequate to support foreign students, and that SU should provide more funding to ensure that foreign students can continue their studies. The SU Administration has expressed support for the idea of providing aid for foreign students, and is now considering how best to implement this. A final decision is expected to be made within the next few weeks.

Jehudah Leftin:
A valiant comeback after a near wipe out

The story of Jehudah Leftin is one of determination and resilience. Leftin, an associate professor of chemistry at the university, was stricken with a severe illness several years ago that threatened to derail his career. Despite this setback, Leftin refused to give up and has made a remarkable recovery.

He attributes his success to a combination of his own willpower and the support of his colleagues and family. "I was fortunate to have a great team around me," he says. "They were there for me when I needed them most."

Leftin's return to the faculty has beennothing short of inspiring. His colleagues and students are impressed by his dedication and passion for teaching. "He is a true role model for all of us," says one of his students.

Leftin's story is a testament to the human spirit. Despite facing seemingly insurmountable challenges, he refused to give up and has emerged stronger than ever. His comeback is a reminder that with hard work and perseverance, anything is possible.
