King conquers Eastie, residents forget old battles

by Paula Causer

When Edward J. King was defeated in a special election for the state Senate in the 1st District in 1990, he lost to the current incumbent, Robert Cote, by more than 3,000 votes. King didn't have much luck in 1992 either, losing to Cote by 2,000 votes.

But something different has happened this time around. In 1994, King again sought the state Senate seat in the 1st District, and this time residents of the district have given him a strong endorsement.

"We're happy to have him back," said one resident of the district.

King's victory in the special election was a major victory for the Democratic Party, which had been struggling to win control of the state Senate. King's victory was seen as a significant step toward achieving that goal.

Another resident of the district, who had been a supporter of King for many years, said, "We're really excited about having him back in the state Senate. He's a strong leader, and we think he can make a big difference for the district."
Skateboards roll for fun and charity

by Andrew Gold

Paul Merlino, a hobbyist skateboarder, has been using his hobby to raise money and help others. Merlino is known for his acrobatic tricks and is the founder of the First Annual Skateboard Championship held in New York City in 1978. The event was a success and since then, Merlino has continued to use his skateboarding skills to help others.

Last year, Merlino organized a charity skateboard event in which participants paid an entry fee and displayed their skills. The money raised was donated to a local charity. This year, Merlino plans to expand the event and raise even more money for a good cause.

Merlino's enthusiasm for skateboarding is matched by his dedication to giving back to the community. He believes that skateboarding is a sport that is often overlooked and that it has the potential to bring joy and happiness to many people. By using his skills to raise money for charity, Merlino is helping to make a positive impact on the world.

Is there life in outer space?

by George Miller

A group of scientists at NASA has recently discovered evidence of life in outer space. The discovery was made after analyzing data from a satellite that was sent into orbit around a distant planet. The satellite has been collecting data for several months and has sent back information that indicates the presence of organic compounds on the planet's surface.

The discovery has been met with excitement and skepticism by the scientific community. Some experts believe that the evidence is conclusive and that life in outer space is a fact. Others are more cautious and believe that the evidence is not yet strong enough to make a definitive conclusion.

The implications of this discovery are vast and could potentially lead to new discoveries in the field of astronomy. It could also have implications for the search for extraterrestrial life and the future of space exploration.

Red Sox slide; Uncle Don to blame?

By Paul O'Grady

The Red Sox, though perhaps not quite as far back as Uncle Don, are in a serious hold-up. Though he's the one who's played his role, it's Uncle Don's fault. He's the only one who's played his role.

Only doctorate candidates hired as business faculty

by American Business

The University of California's Graduate School of Business has hired only doctorate candidates for professorial faculty positions for the past 20 years. However, the school's chairman, Professor B.A. Stevenson, said the new practice is no longer necessary and that all faculty positions will now be filled by candidates with advanced degrees.

McDowell added that if a person wants to become president and does not have a business degree, he will have to become a doctorate candidate and then become a president candidate.
