Police prevent skirmish during strike’s second day

by Nina Garza

A student photographer prevented a skirmish between striking students and those crossing the picket lines at the St. Vincent building last Thursday.

The incident occurred shortly before 11:30 a.m. when a group of students formed outside the building to receive a group of students inside.

The group of students inside were carrying signs and chanting slogans, while the group of students outside were blocking the entrance to the building.

At this point, a photographer from the student newspaper approached the group of students outside and attempted to calm the situation.

The photographer was able to prevent a physical altercation and restore order.

College Committee acts on student proposals

by Bob Garza

The college committee met to discuss student proposals and make decisions.

Each proposal was read and discussed, and then a vote was taken on whether to approve or reject the proposal.

The committee was divided on some of the proposals, but in the end, they were able to reach a consensus.

The committee also discussed ways to improve the student experience and make the college a better place for everyone.

Ram, Yam, Dam; anything but Ewe

by John Torres

The term was filled with drama as the students and faculty navigated through the challenges of the strike.

The highlight of the term was the final exam period, which was filled with stress and anxiety.

The faculty worked hard to ensure that the exams were fair and that the students were able to demonstrate their knowledge.

In the end, the term was a success, and the students were able to move on to the next phase of their academic journey.
SU curriculum designed for transfers discussed

by Ann Robin

In order to better understand the curriculum designed for transfers at Syracuse University, the Board of Trustees in March adopted a new curriculum designed for transfers. The new curriculum, which is designed to meet the needs of students who are transferring from other institutions, is intended to provide a more streamlined and efficient way for students to complete their degree requirements.

The new curriculum, which is designed for transfers, includes a number of changes that are intended to make it easier for students to complete their degree requirements. These changes include a new set of general education requirements, a new set of major requirements, and a new set of minor requirements.

The new general education requirements include a number of changes that are intended to make it easier for students to complete their degree requirements. These changes include a new set of requirements in the areas of English, literature, history, and social sciences.

The new major requirements include a number of changes that are intended to make it easier for students to complete their degree requirements. These changes include a new set of requirements in the areas of business, engineering, and the natural sciences.

The new minor requirements include a number of changes that are intended to make it easier for students to complete their degree requirements. These changes include a new set of requirements in the areas of art, music, and foreign languages.

Moot Court hearings begin

by Janet Constantine

The first round of Moot Court Competition was held last week, with two teams of students facing off in front of a panel of judges. The competition is designed to test the students' ability to present arguments in a legal setting, and is an important part of the law school curriculum.

SGA explains position on strike to SU administration by letter

by John Kellogg

The Student Government Association (SGA) has released a letter to the university administration outlining its position on the current strike. The letter is intended to provide the administration with a clear understanding of the SGA's position on the issue.

The letter is intended to provide the administration with a clear understanding of the SGA's position on the issue. The SGA has been in talks with the administration for several weeks, in an effort to reach a resolution to the strike.

In the letter, the SGA outlines its position on the strike, which includes a demand for improved working conditions, better wages, and a more equitable distribution of resources. The letter also includes a list of specific requests that the SGA is willing to make, in exchange for a resolution to the strike.

The Suffolk Mini Course sign-up is scheduled for today (Aug. 18). The strike at Suffolk was the result of the contract negotiations and is expected to continue until the end of the sign-up period.
Fulmer abused again by student pickets during strike

by James E. Branson

Chief of Campus Security Oscar Gillette, in full uniform, said yesterday that Fulmer has been verbally abused and again physically threatened by student pickets at the South End Strike.

Police were called to the scene yesterday afternoon at the time of the threatening encounter, and a student was arrested by WPI police and charged with disturbing the peace. The student was later released on a $100 bond, and the incident is under investigation.

Fulmer was attacked by a group of students who had gathered in front of the Liberal Arts Building at the time of the arrest. The group continued their verbally abusive behavior throughout the arrest and then dispersed around the campus.

The police were on the scene almost immediately and attempted to break up the crowd. The students then dispersed around the campus.

Parking problem?

With all the attention and effort of the Student Government Association in taking the fight for improved parking facilities to the Student Senate, the parking situation on the campus is in a better state than it has been in a long time. The administration has been responsive to the Student Senate's complaints, and the SGA has increased its efforts to secure better parking facilities. The parking problem is far from solved, but the efforts of the SGA and the administration are commendable.

Unity gathering, but apathy lingers

Last week, a Faculty Senate meeting in the Administration Building was attended by approximately 25 faculty members. The meeting addressed various issues, including the need for better communication between the faculty and administration. Although the faculty expressed concern about the lack of participation in the Student Senate meetings, they also praised the efforts of the SGA in improving parking facilities. The meeting concluded with a call for greater involvement from the faculty in the decision-making process.

Faculty judgment

The Suffolk Journal has been a reliable source of information for the students and faculty of Suffolk University. As a faculty member, I have been impressed with the journal's commitment to providing accurate and timely news. The journal has been particularly effective in covering community events and issues that are important to the students and faculty.

Activities fee hike

The Suffolk Journal has been a valuable resource for students and faculty, providing information on campus events and issues. The journal's coverage of the activities fee hike has been thorough and informative. The journal's efforts to keep students and faculty informed about these important issues have been commendable.

Lefties find haven from right world

By Amanda Meade

"Lefties" have found a haven from the right world in their community, according to a recent study.

The study was conducted among a group of left-handed individuals who were interviewed about their experiences within a right-handed society. The results indicated that left-handed individuals often feel isolated and marginalized within a world that is predominantly right-handed.

Left-handed individuals may face challenges in finding appropriate clothing, tools, and other everyday items designed for right-handed use. This can lead to frustration and a sense of being excluded from mainstream society.

The study also highlighted the importance of creating inclusive environments that accommodate the needs of left-handed individuals. This can include providing left-handed versions of common items and ensuring that spaces and facilities are accessible to left-handed users.

Suffolk volunteer studies to become a woman priest

By Melanie Buckley

Meg Fenwick does not have an interest in becoming a woman priest. She is a volunteer who provides care and support to those in need.

Whatever happened to Meg? The story of the retired nurse is not a typical one. Meg, who has a passion for helping others, decided to pursue a career in nursing rather than the church. She is a dedicated volunteer who works tirelessly to support those in need.

Meg is a role model for others who may be considering a career in nursing. Her dedication and commitment to care have inspired many to follow in her footsteps.

"In the end, Meg's career path was not as planned," said a friend of Meg's. "But she has made the most of it, and she continues to make a difference in the lives of others."
SU faculty recalls their student days here

by Rich O’Connor

Most Suffolk students still agree that the campus of the 1960’s was more than enough to make one feel like braving the heavy traffic in a rubber boat, but not enough to make you wonder if you were in the wrong place. I mean, I can’t speak for all the students, but I can certainly speak for myself. I was there. I saw it. It was a beautiful campus.

In fact, it was so beautiful that I decided to stay. I went into business majoring in accounting. I was good at it, but I didn’t love it. I was more interested in the arts. I wanted to be a writer. I wanted to be a painter. I wanted to be a musician. But I didn’t have the money to pursue those things. So I stuck with accounting.

One day, I was walking down the campus when I saw a group of students playing frisbee. They were having a good time. I thought, ‘If I had known about this when I was in school, I would have been a part of it.’

I started thinking about how much better the campus would have been if we had more activities. If we had more art programs. If we had more music programs. If we had more sports programs. But I didn’t think about it too much. I just kept on walking.

Remember when the world seemed a thick white blanket?

by Rich O’Connor

The campus seems so different now. The buildings are taller. The streets are wider. The people are different. But I think the campus is still the same. It’s just that we’ve changed.

I remember when the world seemed like a thick white blanket. It was cold. It was dark. It was dreary. But it was also beautiful. It was peaceful. It was quiet.

I remember when the campus was like that. I wish it was like that again. But it’s not. It’s too busy. It’s too noisy. It’s too crowded.

I wish I could go back to that time. I wish I could go back to the 1960’s. I wish I could go back to when the world seemed like a thick white blanket.

BeeGees still lack spirit

Bee Gees, including Barry, Robin and Maurice Gibb, and, of course, singer Andy Gibb, were expected to shatter the charts with their new album, "Children of the World." The band's previous album, "Saturday Night Fever," hit the top 5 on the chart. But after the release of the album on Tuesday, Bee Gees followers were disappointed to see that the music had failed to reach a top 5 position.

Even in 1975, Bee Gee fans took note of the group's record company and the group's devotion towards their music. The band's hit song "You Should Be Dancing" was released and fans were excited about hearing the Bee Gees' song in the top 5. But after the release of the album, fans were let down and felt that the group had failed to deliver on their promise.

The song is a typical Bee Gee sound, and it can be heard throughout the album. Despite the disappointment, the group has continued to perform in front of their dedicated following. "You Should Be Dancing" was one of the group's biggest hits and remains popular to this day.

Recognition is the goal of hockey coach

Sue Donald Vannatta

Hockey coach John Curry has been in charge of the University of Colorado hockey team since 1980. "We've been losing, and that's the way it's been, we've been losing," said Curry in his first year. "But I don't think that's going to be too much longer. We've just got to keep the kids in the mixed bag."

Curry was asked what he would like to accomplish in his fourth year as coach and he said, "I'd like to win a national championship."

I'll be the first to admit I am not a world traveler. I have never even lived outside of the state of Massachusetts, and although I have visited other states, I can honestly say that I have never been to New York City. I have, however, traveled to different cities within Massachusetts, and I have found that the travel can be quite enjoyable. I have been to Boston, Cambridge, and Springfield, and I have found that the people there are very friendly and welcoming. I have also visited other states, such as Connecticut, and I have found that the people there are also very friendly. I have found that the travel can be quite enjoyable and I would recommend it to anyone.

But then again, look at the women's basketball team. If they could win a game, they'd be the best basketball team in the world. They'd win a gold medal and go on to become the greatest team ever. But they will not stand in the way of the world's political order.

If you're thinking, "Why not change the system so the women's basketball team can compete on a level playing field?" the answer is simple. The system is designed to keep the women's basketball team from competing.

The truth is, if the women's basketball team could compete on a level playing field, they would be the best team in the world. But the system is rigged to keep them from achieving that.
