With a greater number of students withdrawing,
Retention Committee works on keeping attrition rate down

A number of students withdraw from Suffolk each semester, raising concerns about the educational environment's impact on student satisfaction and retention. The Committee met last week to discuss strategies to reduce attrition.

Evaluating the enrollment problem,
Retention Chair John Smith said,
"We need to engage students more effectively.
They should feel valued and supported.
"Retention is critical for our institutional success, and we must address it proactively."

Boston crime is on the rise, police say

In Lisa J. Griffin

In an interview, Boston crime was described as "on the rise," and police were quoted as saying, "We are seeing an increase in crime." It is noted that the rise in crime is not limited to one area, but rather is a city-wide phenomenon. The increase in crime is attributed to a number of factors, including a decrease in police presence due to budget cuts, and an increase in drug-related activities.

Students express desire for escort service

By Bruce Mosey

Supporters of a new escort service for students are expressing their desire for such a service. They argue that the current system of relying on parents and friends is not sufficient, and that an official, professional service would be more reliable. They also point out that the current system is often ineffective, as students may be unwilling or unable to ask for help in public.

By Susan Jones

Karate has come a long way since it was introduced to the United States a few decades ago. Today, it is recognized as a sport and is taught in many schools and clubs. Many people believe that karate is just for kicking, but it offers much more. It teaches discipline, self-control, and respect. If done properly, karate can be a great way to stay fit.
