No letters of resignation — Hayes and Bartley back on SGA

by Peter George

In an about face from last week, Joe Hayes and John Bartley reversed their decision to resign from the SGA. The move came when, during the reading of the minutes from the meeting of September 27, Hayes moved that “the section that says I resigned be stricken.” SGA President Michael Powers asked Hayes, “Let’s get this straight — are you with us? What’s your standing?”

Hayes replied, “Until next year, we’re (Hayes and Bartley) still on SGA.”

“If you have a personality problem, I’m sorry,” Powers said. “Don’t bring it into here. Leave it outside. If you can’t resolve it, take it to Psych Services.”

The next item on the agenda was the election of an SGA Treasurer. At last week’s meeting, Marty Davis moved to postpone the vote until this week; on Tuesday the vote was finally taken. Nominated to fill the post were Junior Vice President Karen Kelleher and Sophomore President Marty Davis.

In his acceptance speech, Davis stated that his purpose in running for the office was “to bind the body together to work as an effective unit.” Kelleher urged her colleagues to “look within yourselves to decide who can do a better job.”

As stated in the SGA constitution, the vote can go to a maximum of five ballots. If no candidate receives a majority of the vote, by the fifth ballot, the election then goes to a student body vote. The vote went the limit, five ballots, before Davis was declared the winner, nine votes to seven. In his comments to the group following the vote, Davis urged the members to put the events of the past week “behind us.”

The next item of business was the amendment issue. Joe Ruppoli, an SGA student representative, gave the group an update on the results of the student government investigation and student needs.

The next item on the agenda was the election of an SGA Treasurer. Junior-Senior Week have begun to be formulated. The Commencement Ball, Powers announced, was going to be moved from Lombardo’s because of space limitations. He suggested that the committee look at Carouso’s Diplomat in Seagus as a possible location.

Voter apathy, a tragic phenomenon that is confronting this year's November presidential elections, is not far removed from the student voting population of Suffolk University.

The freshman class, vying for more student involvement, interaction, and awareness failed to avail themselves this week of their constitutional right to vote. The opportunity to elect officers for key Student Government seats — President, Vice President and four representatives — was not adequately seized upon by this class. In fact only 125 of the approximate 400 freshmen enrolled exercised the effort to vote. Moreover that's only 25% of the class — far from a fair representation at the polls.

You, as the freshman class shirked your duty to have a say on which candidate should fill these offices — offices that directly affect a student's life on campus, offices that have a say in forming the constitution, offices that have a say in making up your statement of rights. Instead, you neglected your responsibility.

Further, it can't be said that there was no publicity of these elections. There was. Efforts were made by the Journal, WSUB, and SGA posters circulated throughout the university.

Also last Thursday, candidates were questioned by members of the press in a "Meet the Press" type forum. This question and answer session was also advertised as an open meeting to the student body. But again only a few students showed up.

In fact, the largest percentage of the people there were either candidates themselves or members of the press.

It's damn disheartening to hold an election and have a SGA presidential candidate win with only a 62-38 voter margin. This is an internal voting process — so last important voting process on the national scale who knows, we could get a president elected by only 50% of the voting population.

Study areas a positive innovation

As students, we constantly complain about the negative aspects of the university, whether it be overcrowded conditions, tuition hikes or internal SGA problems — seldom do we cite the positive actions being taken. In fact, it's positive, viable implementations that make life in a learning atmosphere bearable amidst the apparent problems.

Within a few weeks, students will be able to utilize various empty classrooms as open study areas. A bulletin, compiled by Assistant Dean of Liberal Arts and Sciences Bob Eckfeldt, will be posted throughout the university informing each student which classrooms are open to them and at which hours during the day.

The publication of this listing will allow the student who finds the library unconducive to studying to avail himself of another quiet area. In fact, this listing could alleviate the overcrowded situation that often occurs within the library during midterm and final exam time.

This listing will allow various organizations to utilize these empty rooms for meetings and/or get-togethers. Eckfeldt stresses, however, that the organizations' utilization of rooms will take priority to students' use of the rooms for studying.

To make the program workable, students must make the effort to read the bulletin and thus utilize the space. It's a well-known fact that we need additional study space at Suffolk, so let's take advantage of it and use it to its fullest potential.

Space to be Made Available for Study in Vacant Classrooms

by Mary Griffin

A list of available student study space will be distributed next week throughout the university.

The list is divided into the daily schedule of classes. Assistant Dean Peter Sartwell, with assistance from Chris Perry, of the President's office, put the information together. Classrooms will be specifically assigned for student study space and students will be able to study for a few hours without disruption.

Organizational meetings however, will have priority in using classrooms which students must honor. Classrooms will be unlocked.
Dear Editor,

I would like to express another view on some of the remarks made in last week’s Journal, concerning the Hayes-Bartley amendment. The Journal chose to see the issue from a narrowed-point of view for the benefit of a few. It seems ironic that the Journal claimed that its philosophy in dealing with the SGA has “been to play up their successes in an effort to bring Suffolk students together and have their problems extinguished.”

The way last week’s Journal handled a very potent issue was not helpful to the SGA, but rather it served as a vehicle to promote more tension within the body.

If every vote made by the SGA is to become a subject of an editorial, I hope the facts expressed are closer to the truth. As for my reason of abstaining, I was criticized because I refused to play a part in a personality game. This is why the Journal this was considered “ineffectiveness.” Why should I be forced to make a decision on an issue, when I do not wholeheartedly agree with either side? This is my ineffectiveness.

John Bartley stated, “The people who abstained are the ones on SGA when it comes to work for them. They never deal with the problems of SGA; they always abdicate.” The record clearly shows that this is the first time that I have abstained on any SGA vote.

The friction within the group on this issue was so strained that “cool heads” could not prevail. If the Journal persists in its stand of forcing compliance with its view, an effective SGA will never exist.

This amendment basically makes sense. But, it was presented in a manner to breed problems. There was a definite lack of communication with many members of the body. What would have happened if this amendment was enacted during the summer? Who would have said no? Would there have been an SGA treasurer?

Hopefully the SGA will be able to pull together and move forward for the benefit of all the students. There is no room for publicity seekers. Good, productive debate is not to write an editorial. I should not be forced to go to college.

I make mistakes. How does it feel to be faultless?

Letter to the Editor:

Your reporting of the incidents of last week’s SGA meeting showed a complete lack of good journalistic style and responsibility. Your first error was to report the resignation of three SGA members, where in fact, only one member did resign, and he was totally uninvolved in this controversy.

Of the two members that were involved in the “controversy” one made it very clear to me immediately following the meeting, that he had little or no intention of resigning.

As for the second person involved with the “controversy” he has not as yet, formally in written form, constitutionally, notified me of his resignation. As a result of these circumstances both of the members in question are still voting members of SGA.

Your reporting of the alleged controversy was an excellent example of sensationalism.

There are to my knowledge only two members on the SGA who, according to their own acknowledgments, are unable to work with their fellow SGA members. The conflict of personalities itself involves no more than five people. Such a number, five out of 25 is not a poor average at all.

In the future I hope that you will be able to utilize the journalistic skills which are taught to you at Suffolk’s journalism department and check and re-check to verify your information. This procedure will no longer make you an easy target for personal ploys, and you will therefore no longer become subject to these ploys by a very few members of the Suffolk community who allow their voices to be heard over everyone else.

Sincerely,
Michael Powers
SGA President

Frustrated Dance Partners

Don’t let the sun go down on your love and nobody was listening. When the roll call vote was taken, this issue had not been adequately resolved. I could not vote on an amendment when the amendment process had not been clearly defined.

I fully acknowledge the valuable function that our Suffolk Journal fulfills for our university. By presenting the whole picture they could only enhance their position.

Respectfully,
Karen M. Kelleher

RE: Your report of my comment in your editorial. That was a low blow. Although I have been involved with SGA for a little over a year, I have only recently begun to participate in the meetings as an elected official. I am still learning the procedures as a legislative participant. I, as well as you and the rest of the student body at Suffolk are here to learn. Student Government is another facet of my learning process. If I were perfect I would not be going to college.

I am unlike you in at least one way, I make mistakes. How does it feel to be faultless?

Student Turnover Minimal
Candidates Take On Press

by Patricia A. Callahan

Five of seven candidates for President and Vice-President of the Class of 1980 placed their views before the student body last week by participating in the first annual Suffolk University Press Conference for SGA Candidates.

Presidential candidates Ken Chester and Tom Marden, and Vice-Presidential hopefuls Bob Carroll, Amy Ronkin, and Alex Jevgrafovs were each given three minutes to make a statement of their qualifications and policies if elected. Each candidate then answered two questions from each member of a "press panel" made up of SGA President Michael Powers, WSUB Station Manager Daniel Petipas, and Journal Editor Deborah Burke. The Press Conference was moderated by Philip Santoro, Managing Editor of the Journal.

Ken Chester said the SGA is a viable form of student government with "influence and responsibilities to the school." He plans to "get out to the students" through the media. He said that "promising policies here is worthless," and, if elected, will call a class meeting to determine what the students want him to do. Chester, from Lunenburg High School, was Editor-in-Chief of his high school paper, a year as class president, and junior-year service as Student Advisory Board Chairman.

Tom Marden was involved in sports at Wilmington high school, but shied away from student government because it was "run by a social clique." Marden says at Suffolk, "I want to be active, and I want the class to be active with me." He wants to place a greater emphasis on active student involvement. He feels that the present SGA is doing a good job, but "they're going to the administration, not to the students." If elected, he would call a class meeting "to let us know what's going on." Marden indicated that he will determine his actions by his classmates' feelings. "If I find I can't do the job, I'll be willing to step down," Marden spent a weekend this summer in Washington participating in a "Model Congress," working with Senators and Representatives and learning how laws are made.

Vice-Presidential candidate Bob Carroll feels it's important to take an active part in government, because "if you can't fight it, you can change it." Carroll feels that by taking the SGA and making it work, Suffolk students can realize that they can get involved and take part in any form of representative government. SGA members have to "let the people know we are willing to work for them," he says. Carroll believes that "student activities are the heart of student life," and would like to help more students get involved in them.

As president of his CTV, Carroll found that "before you can get any government going, you have to deal with people's problems." Amy Ronkin wants to "involve those who want to be involved" with Student Government affairs. She sees the lack of communication between the students, faculty, and administration and the general apathy of the student body as two of the biggest problems facing Suffolk freshmen. She would like to see WSUB using its TV facilities, and would strive for "friendly working relations" with the media. Ronkin's governmental experience includes a term as Vice-President and a term as President of B'nai Brith, as well as various chairmanships and fund raising activities on behalf of that organization.

Alex Jevgrafovs cited communication as Suffolk's major problem. "45 minutes ago I found out about this press conference." He feels that WSUB radio outlets are too limited, and WSUB-TV is "never on." A meeting between the SGA and the student body would help improve communications, he thinks. "Freshmen are not going to come up and ask what's going on," Jevgrafovs says, but he feels that they would ask questions in an open meeting setting. Jevgrafovs serves as Activities, Aeronautics Education, and Information Office in the Boston Squadron of the Civil Air Patrol, and works as a shift supervisor for Brigham's.

Dr. Frederic E. Pamp, of Rockport, has been appointed Director of the Executive MBA Program and Institute for Business Management programs by the College of Business Administration. Dean Richard L. McDowell.

chosen from a final field of six can­ didates, Pamp is "essentially the dean" of the program, and has extensive professional background in various foundations, associations, businesses, and educational institutions.

A native of this area, Pamp returned to his Boston six years ago because, "the New York 'rat race' became too much."

He became familiar with Suffolk University while reading an advertisement for his present position in the Wall Street Journal.

"I came up (to Boston) for a job that pattered out," said Pamp. "I was further their knowledge and education of their particular endeavor."

Pamp believes the program is "ideally suited to the needs of the man who is already in management and wants that little extra ‘oomph.'"

Four 11-week programs are offered every school year, starting in October, January, April, and June.

The classes meet on Saturdays only in the Penton Building and are broken into two time periods: 8:45-12:30 and from 1:15-5:00 P.M.

One of the problems facing Pamp so far is the number of applicants for the October session. As a result, a cut-off point is a definite possibility.

Approximately 120-30 persons are already registered, with others calling every day seeking admission.

"If the program gets too big it'll outgrow its usefulness," he admitted.

The enrolled students are split into six groups of about 20 persons each.

Pamp would like to keep these groups small because they stay together as teams throughout the entire 11-week period. In that way, the students become close and the learning and exchanging of ideas is fun, he explained.

The program has 14 instructors; three from the Business School faculty, and the remaining 11 from the business community, who have had extensive teaching experience, Pamp stressed.

Weekend Escape

by Patricia Maloney

An outdoor adventure was held last weekend to introduce new campers to the outdoor life and to give the more experienced people a chance to get away from the city. Student Activities and the Ski and Outing Club sponsored the trip on Thompson’s Island in Boston Harbor.

Friday night some members of the Suffolk Community arrived on the island from Kelly’s Landing in South Boston. The camping grounds were set up on the secluded southern end of the barren island.

Exploration of the marsh lands and "Ropes Confidence Course" were the main events of the trip. The "Ropes Confidence Course" encouraged teamwork, building self-confidence and problem solving in groups.

One of the members of the group, Sue Hurley, said, "The Ropes Course was highly beneficial. I think everyone should get out there and try it."

Ken Kelley, Student Activities Director, was "attracted by the beauty of Boston as viewed from the island at night."

Kelley was impressed by the "easy access to the island from the city, yet it is completely isolated." He noted of the enormous success of this initial camping venture, more trips to the island will be planned for the spring semester or possibly this winter.

The Thompson’s Island staff introduced the campers to the one-and-a-half mile long island. Kelley commented that "The staff was extremely helpful to us." The Suffolk group was joined on the "Ropes Course" by a group from Babson Institute which was conducting a re­

"SUB — THE PLACE TO BE"
"t" and sympathy

by John Ricciardone

What is red, orange, blue, and green; is 79 years old; has 6000 employees; and is habitually in financial straits?

The often cursed Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, more commonly known as the MBTA, or the "T."

Unfortunately, the T often has the image of being slightly better than the Wicked Old Witch of the West. Although, some commuters will argue that the witch's form of travel was faster and more comfortable than that of the T.

In one of an ill reputation, the T, when not on fire, colliding with the forward train, derailed, or inoperative due to snow, is an inexpensive and practical way of moving in, and around the Boston area.

The Green Line trolley service is a joke, the Blue Line trains antiquated, the Red Line boring, and Orange Line is but an endless concrete platform. Nevertheless, the T does have its good points.

The most important being the price. The T, in its splendor, is still one of the cheapest public transportation systems in the country. The entrance fare at most stations is only

I'm not sure how I got into writing food columns—and it's because I like to cook—and we all like to eat! On the other hand there are literally thousands of cookbooks around. Publishers consider them best sellers, so who am I to compete with the best? Just nervy I guess.

Here's one of my spaghetti tries. It's one that is not Italian with ammended sauce, garlic and oregano, not "Irish—Italian" that calls for Mexican chili powder, it's just a concoction that brings an automatic demand for seconds, in my kitchen anyway.

Cut up 1/6 to one pound of cheese into small pieces and set aside. Cook one to one and a half pounds of hamburger in a frying pan. Open one can of tomato soup. Here's the twist.

In a large baking dish put in a layer of spaghetti, a layer of meat, a layer of chopped vegetables and a layer of cheese pieces and so on until all ingredients are used. Pour over the can of soup, mix well and bake in a preheated 375 degree oven for about one and a half hours. It's crusty and brown and bubbly with cheese. Soup, meat, starch food, vegetables and a cheese all in one!...
The Psychological Services Department was initiated in 1947. At that time the director was also the chairman of the psychology department. Their work included researching data and reading, as well as keeping abreast of the latest developments in the field. Dr. Garni said, "At that time the philosophy was geared to remedial work, now we're more preventive health care." The Psychological Services Department is fully accredited as a University Center by the National Association of Counseling Services (American Personnel and Guidance Association).

There are many expansion programs that are available to all day and evening graduates and undergraduates, alumni and administration members. There is individual and group counseling in careers, academics, jobs, family problems, and problems of socialization. As far as courses are concerned, there is an interpersonal relationship courses.

The Department maintains a Career Education Library. It includes directories, reference books, catalogs, along with occupational pamphlets; also located in the library is a national microfilm collection of college catalogs. There is no fee for any service available. Strict records are kept to maintain confidentiality. No information can be obtained unless a written release is obtained by the student.

Psych Services is a distinguished part of Suffolk University. Students should be aware of the availability of the services and programs offered. The staff is friendly, outgoing and confident that they can help you in some way.

If there is any need to make an appointment, the department is located in Room 20 of the Archer Building. One of the psychologists is always in the office.
Lambs Over Bargain 6-0 In Gridiron Thriller

by Frank Parello and Kevin Loom

The defensive secondary of the Canned Lambs intercepted three Bargain passes in key situations, and took back one of them for the only score of the best game played last week.

Both teams lacked the offensive punch that they had shown in previous games. Thursday was the "Day of the Defense," with the Canned Lambs coming out on top, 6-0.

The only score of the game came in the second half when Dave Van Bars picked off a Rich Murray aerial and raced 19 yards, untouched, for the Lambs score. The conversion failed.

In the first half, with the Bargain driving downfield to the Lambs 20-yard line, Murray threw a pass into the endzone which Paul Arsensault picked off and ended a bargain scoring threat. The third interception came with only four minutes remaining in the game. Bargain moved the ball to the Lambs 40-yard line. Murray went back to pass and this time was victimized by Doug Ross who ran the ball back to the Bargains 40-yard line, and killed any chance of a score.

The Lambs drove down to the Bargains goal line with only seconds remaining, and were stopped twice by the awesome and tenacious Bargain defense.

Each team had the opportunity to score, but it was the defense of both teams that impressed Mr. Thomas Walsh, director of the league, and prompted him to say, "It was the best game played this year." In other action this week, the Bones led by Steve Kelly, who threw two touchdown passes and ran for another one, crushed TKE 26-6.

Kelly's first touchdown pass came in the first half, when he fired a six-yard strike to Bill Young. It was the only score of the half, and the Bones led 6-0.

TKE came back early in the second half to tie the game when Jack Baglio ran the ball 22 yards for the score. The Bones answered back on toch yard field and scored when Kelly ran seven yards for the touchdown. The conversion was good and made the score 13-0.

The women's tennis team was served up their third straight defeat (5-0) in as many starts, at Clark University.

"We lost badly, they weren't that strong, we should have done better," said coach Guibert. The team is showing tremendous improvement as each match goes by in spite of their record. It is important to realize though, that this is the first year in competition for the team. The team which has been together two years past has been a varsity squad as of this fall.

According to Guibert, none of the girls have participated in tennis much in the past. This has been a heavy setback for the team, but they have not lost spirit and determination to play on.

Members of Golf Team Getting It Together

"Golf is a game which goes by the book. There's no way to set up a system of communications while on the course."

This undoubtedly makes the coach's job difficult. He can't contact his players by devising a signal or calling for a time out. It also makes the coach's job rough when his squad is inexperienced, as is the case with this season's Suffolk University golf team.

"There really isn't much you can do," said Rams coach Charlie Law. "My main purpose is selecting in which order the players are going to compete. I try to help out the young man the finest way I possibly can. Golf is a very hard sport to coach. That's for sure."

The Rams are in second place in the Little Poor College Golf Tournament at the Saddle Hill Golf Course in Hopkinton. Bentley College is in first place in the eight-year-old tournament with 26 points. They are followed by Suffolk 28, Assumption 21 and Clark 4.

With a majority of new faces surfacing, it is difficult to assess the Rams linkers of 1976-77. Coach Law has only two players returning from last year's contingent, and was able to hold only a single practice session before the opening tournament.

"One of the big problems is getting use of the local courses for practices and matches," declared Law. "What are you going to do? That's just the way it is."

Seniors Bruce Hendrickson and Paul DeFederico are the only returning veterans on the team. Capt. Hendrickson, who is possessing an 82 average, is a four year regular.

According to Law, freshman Andy Campbell of Melrose and Gary Phillips of Brookline are termed "outstanding prospects for the future." Campbell has this season's Suffolk handicap and Phillips a four.

Larry Kelly and Michael Cohan, who is a junior college transfer, are being counted on to contribute to the squad.

In summary, the golfers from Beacon Hill, who will take part in the New England Tournament at Cape Cod later this fall, have yet to put it all together.

"We surely have our work cut out for us," stated Law. "As it stands now, we have six very good players. We have to do is find one more very good player and we're in business. There's plenty of talent on this year's team. I guess all we can do at this time is try our best and see what happens. It's up to the players to determine how far we can go."

Student Discount for Charles River Park Tennis

Night Games ... Beneficial to Fans?
by Greg Brooks

The regular baseball season is finally over, and the playoffs will be starting tomorrow. The New York Yankees are the biggest and probably the only surprise among the four divisional winners. The Philadelphia Phillies and Cincinnati Reds are the winners in the National League; the Kansas City Royals and Yankees were the victors in the American League.

All playoff games except those scheduled during the weekend will be played at night. Of course we all know why. Baseball, like the other major sports, has become a big business. So naturally the men behind the scenes will attempt to attract as many fans as possible. And what better way is there to do that than schedule night games during the week.

A lot of players don't like the idea, and with good reason. Nights are chilly in Philly, Cincy, and New York during the fall. They tell me the same is true for K.C. Pitchers' arms tend to stiffen up easier in the colder air, and the batters can't pick up the ball as well in the night. I suppose players have plenty of less important reasons for not wanting to play under the lights.

Despite all the minuses with night games, I like the idea. Scheduling games at night won't affect the attendance at the ballpark. During the playoffs and world series, fans will go to the games regardless of what time they are scheduled.

As far as television is concerned, night games can draw twice as many people. Let's face it, there are a lot of fans who wouldn't be able to see the games if they were scheduled during the day.

Between those who work, and those who go to school, there aren't many people able to watch baseball during the afternoon. Many people would have to rush home just to catch a few innings.

Though it is true the playoffs are scheduled at night for financial reasons, the fans will benefit. And that doesn't happen too often in sports these days.

Playing at night won't affect the outcome of the playoffs, or at least it shouldn't. All players are performing under the same conditions, and when you're going for the championship it doesn't matter where or when the games are played.

Harriers Fall to Fitchburg
by Don Grennan

The Suffolk University cross-country team lost a dual meet to Fitchburg State, last Saturday, by a score of 16-45.

Suffolk had only two healthy runners, Don Grennan and Gary Byrne. Both Greg Eustis and Aubrey Langford ran with injuries. Grennan garnered the fifth spot for the Rams, with a time of 34:36 over the six-mile course, to prevent a Fitchburg sweep. Coming in behind Grennan were Byrne and Eustis, who finished ninth and twelfth, respectively. Langford had to pull out of the race at the three-mile mark because of a bruised left knee.

Coach Jim Nelson summed up his team's performance with one word, "Frustrating."

"Six of our men couldn't make it to the race today because of either personal obligations or injuries."

"But some of the frustration was relieved by the once again exceptional showing of Grennan," Nelson declared. "He continues to improve in every race he runs."

Nelson also said that Byrne has looked good in the past couple of races. One sidenote to last Saturday's meet. Fitchburg's McDonald set a new Fitchburg course record with a winning time of 32:17.

"I'm not going to let the attitudes of some people affect the smooth running of the Student Government Association."

SGA “A Little Divided” Admits President Powers
by Rick Saia

Because of the announced resignations of representatives Joe Hayes and John Bartley at their last meeting, the Student Government Association has lost a week's work and the body is a little divided, according to SGA President Michael Powers.

"I think our integrity as a whole in this school has gone down," commented Powers. With alleged personality conflicts plaguing the SGA, Powers said that the SGA "is not a forum for people bringing their personal conflicts into." He added that he won't let personalities clash again at an SGA meeting, noting that he, as president, has the right to end discussion not pertaining to subject matter. Powers said that neither Hayes nor Bartley consulted with him or Vice President Jim Mallorzi regarding the amendment. Last year, Mallorzi was removed from the Constitutional Change Committee in which a revised constitution was approved last April. Powers felt that the two representatives should have spoken to various people and asked opinions before the amendment was presented at the meeting. "I don't know of any people that they consulted with," he added. Powers said that the upcoming SGA retreat on October 23-24 will clear up the personality conflicts on the SGA. "Hopefully," he added, "it will come out to the betterment of the whole Student Government."

"I'm a little disgusted at some people's attitudes," said Powers. "But other than that, I'm not going to let the attitudes of some people affect the smooth running of the Student Government Association. All the committees are going to be right on time, right on target with all the events; and the goals that we set out at the beginning of the summer to accomplish will be accomplished."

"Cousin" Renews Living

by Joe Monaco

Once in a while, a film comes along that freshens and lifts your soul with such an exhilaration that you feel like running from the theatre, diving back into the world with your heart full and your spirit soaring.

The film opens at a family wedding, an intimate affair that grows more gay and lively as the day progresses. Two distant relatives, Marie and Ludovic (Victor Lanoux) meet and a friendship develops. As they become more acquainted Tacchella pans to a close-up of a squirrel in a small cage. Their restriction in their lives has been revealed. Tacchella's special effects contribute a gentle quality to "Cousin, Cousine." They give the impression of something other than a platonie one. Yet Marie and Ludovic are forced to quit; she could neither afford the loss of her job nor to scrap some illegal dollars out of their respective purses.

Their spouses (Marie-France Pisier and Guy Marchand) have already spent the night together. In an ironic twist, they attempt to reform their

The Crime Of Poverty

A WELFARE MOTHER by Susan Sheehan, Houghton Mifflin, 100 pp., $6.95.

"Lasy, convivial lessons.

Such is the stereotype of the welfare recipient that has wormed its way into the working class intelligentsia. Somehow it soothes the ego to imagine that the poor people who live on the earnings of others are indeed dark, sinister, and greedy. Any attempt to convert this working class obsession is angrily dismissed as tawdry liberal politics.

In a clear-sighted sweep of genius, Susan Sheehan has avoided political innuendos. A Welfare Mother never pretends to tackle the entire welfare system. It documents one case; hammers out in detail the life of Carmen Santana, a 40-ish mother of nine.

In April, 1969, Carmen Santana left her native Puerto Rico for the "opportunity" of New York. After several years of factory work she was forced to quit; she could neither afford even a small meal nor to have them looked after. A few months later her husband lost his job. Carmen then welcomed her sister-in-law's introduction to public assistance.

She looked for other jobs but never succeeded. Her desperate need for welfare increased as she was taught the game of deception — taught as much by necessity as by the welfare system itself.

ShePlayed a startling role in Carmen Santana's life. She is a pawn, a victim, a game piece in the cruel business of poverty. She keeps everything out in the open, to maintain a platonic relationship, if only to evoke jealousy from her contemporaries. They are completely engulfed with each other. Tacchella closes in on their bond and all the evidence of their relationship brought out in their

The company of drugs and prostitution are commodity of New York City's tourist attractions. She has never seen a play or a circus, visited a museum, or been to a social or political organization. Vocal Maturity Marks Comeback

by Kurt Kroeger

"Seed of Memory" — Terry Reid ABC-935

"Seed of Memory" stands to be one of the most hauntingly beautiful albums of the year, if not, the last few years. Reid returned in 1976 with a start. Reid's music was more fire to its established strength. "Seed of Memory," Reid's most current offering, is that of an unknown artist. Many can place the name in regard to a once young rock-guitar player who has become extremely popular in the late 60's but who quite suddenly and inexplicably dropped out of the music scene. Others won't even care — not now. Reid's vocals and love songs of his past recordings. They all pale in comparison.

Terry Reid, at the age of 17, was an up and coming musical talent. He ling new album entitled "River." The change was so remarkable that many of his old fans didn't know how to reacce it. The power of his voice was still evident, if not on an even grander scale, but the music was more fire to its established strength.

"Shrew" Cast As Wild Fun

by Susan Beland

Petruchio: Why that is nothing; for I tell you, father, I am as peremptory as she is proud and minded.

And where two raging fires meet together.

We will work and party all day, come for the day. Get Involved!!

The large supporting cast is strong. It includes: Richard Cochrane (Lutensio), Samantha Wendrother (Bianca), Stephen Aebren (Hortensio), Stephen B. (Tranio) and Grey Johnson (Grumio).

The audience is attentively swept along by the first part of the action as Katherine (Bianca) talks to the ladies with her fierce tongue and savage manner. That is, until Petruchio under-takes to get in the picture with his follow-ups. A grand battle of the sexes. Also there is the trickery and plotting, horror who shall win the blushing Bianca, a further plot development in real soap operas. A further plot development in Shakespeare's eloquent verse. Petruchio wins (or does he?) as Katherine finally submits.

I am ashamed that women are so simple.

"Soap" has too many breaks to suds the night out. Though little fire grows great with little wind, yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all. So tell her and she will yield to me.

Petruchio's words are put to the test. The result is a fiery but hilarious confrontation on the stage of the Boston Shakespeare Company, which opened its second season on September 18th.

Boston's own talented Shakespearean company enthusiastically captures the spirit, the folly and the madcap fun of the Elizabethan period. The actors and the persons attired in contemporary dress and the music composed especially for the production are very recommended.

Shakespeare's good-natured banter and clever humor concerning courtship and marriage seem to parallel contemporary affairs. The plot and resolutions of the characters could well be our own. This is a gypsy play in which the characters enjoy themselves as much as the audience does (battles and all).

TAMING OF THE SHREW is a comic tale of determination and rivalry; of Petruchio who seeks to wed, to subdue and to domesticate the fiery Katherine; and of the many complications which surround her. Among them is the question for Kate's sister, the demure, angel-like Bianca.

The production has a first scene impressively. The technical aspects of the production are polished. We are taken to Padua on a stage that is small but cleverly designed. Action is evenly distributed on the two floors of the set. A staircase on each side of the stage provides a good balance as well as sufficient exits for the comings and goings of the players. The lighting is effectively integrated into the action to heighten many individual scenes.

The stage directions for the interactions between characters may seem repetitious and boring. Over all, the transitions between scenes with overt prop changes, were handled well.

Before the opening scene the cast complete with a minstrel ensemble in semi-darkness to sing the mellifluous composition, "Lovely Love." Robert Fiorentino, the minstrel, created melodic melodies complete with a minstrel assemble in the basement of a house; the walls, floor, and ceiling are gray. The monitor can play the music composition on stage or on a live monitor to heighten many individual scenes.

The set design is small but cleverly handled well. Ramon Ramos is as fool-hardy Gremio, the first of many roles. He is the vehement, unruly Kate the泼妇.
“The story about monsters is not just about monsters, but about man. Man is the great pretender who thinks he knows everything. If he finds something he does not know about, he would say that it does not exist.”

Lee Frank explained why the creature of Loch Ness, Scotland, has become important to science researchers until recently. Frank has made three trips to the loch, one of those being with the Academy of Applied Science.

The search has been in effect since 1933. Accounts of sightings of the Loch Ness are recorded long before this, but the people around the loch hushed them up, saying the creature was associated with the devil.

Scotland, a country like the rest of Europe, was ruled by a religion-backed monarchy. The worst crime was to be associated with the devil. Thus anyone seeing the creature would remain silent so as not to be accused of being in league with the underworld.

Loch Ness in northern Scotland has a depth of 914 feet, making it the deepest lake in Europe. There are seven rivers which flow into the loch, none of which emerge to allow anything of size to pass in or out, but also keep the silt from settling to the bottom of the lake. This is why no underwater photos have ever come back from this loch.

The chemical content of the lake is such that a corpse will not float to the bottom. A corpse of the loch creatures has never been found and will not be. Frank believes that there are anywhere from 12 to 20 creatures in the loch. From the accounts of sightings, their size is from 15 to 90 feet. He says the creature is something that remains from the dinosaur age.

He said this was not a far-fetched idea. John Muir stated that those who were threatened by the extinct have been caught recently.

The creature has been sighted about 25 times on land and has been described to have two horns like appendages on its head, thought to be breathing pores, with seaweed-like whiskers, small black eyes, and thick hair on the neck. The torso is said to be bulbous.

Underwater photos to date have not come out of the lake because of the lake’s murky water. The few photos taken above-water were taken by people caught surprised at what they have seen. There are photographers stationed around the loch waiting for the monster’s appearance. Many have missed shots, because of the astonishment of what was seen.

Before the search became intensive, there were many more sightings. Frank says the increased activity on and around the loch has frightened the creature. If and when the creature is found, Frank hopes that a decision is made that the creature will remain in the loch and not be removed.

Frank is now involved with hunting “Bigfoot” down south. His last trip brought him close to one. He got samples of hair, evidence of nails, and foot print casts. The people that have seen it and Frank plans to go back to help explain what it is.

“Once people understand these beings,” said Frank, “they will stop calling them monsters.”

Ronayne Claims No Space Problem

by Mary Griffin

Improvements took place this fall to cut costs and use any available space throughout the university by the means of enrollment, registration and classroom capacity.

“Enrollment of all the on-campus buildings for the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences and the College of Business Administration has surpassed this fall by four students,” said Dr. Michael R. Ronayne, Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences.

The total student enrollment figure of 4600 increased to 4904 students this fall, who were scheduled throughout approximately 600 classes.

Dean Ronayne believes that in order to control classroom capacity, the enrollment of a certain number of students is necessary to balance the budget.

“The population this year is high enough to help balance the budget, but we would like to have an impede an efficient academic process,” Ronayne stated. “It is a big guessing game,” he said, referring to the try to estimate the number of students needed each fall for enrollment to balance the budget.

Suffolk University this summer became partial owner of a new computer to assist with the scheduling and registration processes. Suffolk has a total of 11 computer terminals, Model 1170 a high powered mini-computer, and that are connected to the data processing center at Babson College. The computer is owned by a college consortium called ACCOMP, who share time on the system.

Suffolk University along with Babson College, Bunker Hill Community College, Perkins School for the Blind, Simmons College, Regis College, and Wellesley College are members of the computer system.

Dean Ronayne plans to use the computer system to improve the spring registration.

A classroom capacity list was used to aid in course registration this semester and assist in eliminating some problems of overcrowded classrooms. The student capacity of each classroom was determined by architects, in regard to the various fire laws.

“Everything is done in a cost effective manner, that’s why it’s time consuming,” said Dean Ronayne. “We have to find how to cut costs while at the same time balance the budget.” Efficiency is one way Ronayne believes the computer can be used. An example of this efficiency is how the space is used. Ronayne said that Suffolk is run by, for a school of its size.

“Our university needs more space and efficiency,” he said, “the university can cut costs, improve efficiency and professionally trained, dedicated teachers to guide adolescent girls who have personal, social, and family difficulties.

Ronayne claims that the resignations were impulsive because of the high emotions involved. I feel that things can be worked out.”

Brown and David Crosby and Graham Nash. Tim Weisberg also adds his flute work to this cut. “To Be Treated Right” is basically an acoustic guitar tune round out with snatches of harmonica. The final track “Feeling You” is the mellower track. It ends in a poignant yet strainless solo by Pfas Johnson.

The end result is an album which cries out to an audience to be played over and over again. There are no additives which can adequately cover up Jackson Browne’s work. It is an album which deserves its fair share of attention.
