The choice of a new generation

ENDORSEMENT

This year's presidential campaign is unlike any other campaign in the history of our country: it is the campaign which will mark a turning point in our society. The current recession is more than the result of economic decline, it is the symptom of further dangers which will face the future of the United States.

We have all seen the commercials, the campaign messages, the debates, and we have heard our leaders and political contenders expound accusations against one another on character, policy, records, and platform. And through the din of it all, we the people must decide who should lead this country through some of the most perilous times it has seen in its history.

Now more than ever, this country needs a leader who will be able to build greater understanding among the fragile factions of democracy, to bring fiscal control back into bureaucracy, to rebuild the infrastructure and foundations which made this country an industrial giant and a world leader. We need a change in the system that has spawned political corruption, fail economic policy, and stagnant government.

This country needs Bill Clinton as our next president.

Bill Clinton has risen above the turmoil of this election year and become the true catalyst for real and effective change in our government and in our society. He is a man of the people, and he demonstrates genuine understanding for the plight of the American people in the dismal days.

Clinton supports national health care, reducing the deficit, the creation of jobs and stimulating the economy, scaling down the military, making quality education available to all, equitable civil rights, better law enforcement, a woman's right to choose, and reducing the national debt.

Born in Hope, Arkansas, Bill Clinton was born with the cards stacked against him. He rose to the challenge of being disadvantaged, and triumphed. Eighteen months ago he began his bid for the White House in a field of seven democratic challengers, a vague face in the crowd running on a message of change against a president fresh off a victorious military adventure.

During the primaries, the economy got worse and President Bush's popularity declined remarkably, and Clinton was able to distinguish himself from his democratic rivals.

From the days of the New Hampshire primary to the finale

Suffolk student car-jacked near North Station on way to campus

By Lawrence M. Walsh
Journal Staff

BOSTON- A Suffolk University student was car-jacked on October 19 at approximately 8 p.m. while parking his car on Merrimac Street.

David Pearson, 19, sophomore, said he had just parked his car and was beginning to step out when a black male jumped in his car and told him to get back in and he needed a ride to Roxbury.

The assailant said he had a gun, but would not hurt him. "I heard the word gun, and I kind of got scared," said Pearson.

Because the automatic door locks unlocked the passenger door as well as the driver's door, the car-jacker was able to get in the car without using force.

Pearson had stopped for gas in Reading on his way to Boston and still had his wallet on his lap when the man jumped in the car. He had two ten dollar bills sticking out of the wallet and the man said he needed the money.

The car-jacker took the wallet and started looking through it for credit cards and more money. He asked Pearson if he had a bank card so they could get more money. Pearson said he did not have a bank card or any credit cards.

As they were pulling out of the parking space, the car-jacker wrote down Pearson's address from his driver's license. He said that he took his address so he could send him the money back.

The car-jacker wanted Pearson to drive him to Roxbury. But Pearson told him even if he had a gun he was not going to drive him to Roxbury. Instead, the car-jacker directed him to a gas station in Dorchester.

"He probably could have directed me to Roxbury and I wouldn't have known it," said Pearson. He explained he is from Reading and does not know Dorchester or Roxbury very well.

During their 20-minute trip to Dorchester, Pearson said the car-jacker was not violent, but

Suffolk seeking more classroom space in One Beacon Street Budgeting conflict may hinder expansion

By Andrea Rumpf

BEACON HILL- Negotiations for the lease of property at One Beacon St. have apparently been unsuccessful due to an unforeseen budget conflict.

The leaders of the university were interested in acquiring classroom space on the mezzanine above Fitcorp. The space consisted of two sixty seat classrooms which could be divided into four thirty seat classrooms.

The space would be used for students of both the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, and the School of Management, day and evening divisions.

According to Suffolk Vice President and Treasurer Francis X. Flannery, any anticipation regarding the lease of this property is

Israeli consulate holds conference to explain Middle East peace talks

By Phil Hager
Contributing Reporter

BOSTON- On Thursday, October 22, the consulate general of Israel held a press conference for interested members of the university media community.

The press conference was held in reference to the seventh round of peace talks between Israeli, Syrian, Lebanese, and Jordanian-Palestinian delegates that began Wednesday, October 21.

Consul General of Israel to New England, Yaakov Levy, started the conference off with a brief explanation of the conflict that has existed between many Arabs and the present state of Israel.

Levy explained his government's goals and how negotiation is paramount with the present Israeli administration. Just having representatives of each group sitting at one table with the representative of Israel is progress in itself, stressed Levy.

As media representatives from different colleges from New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and Massachusetts listened, Levy covered briefly Israel's proposals for Interim Self Government Arrangements (ISGA), which was the key motive for the peace talks in Washington, D.C. He explained that Israel's ISGA was to provide Palestinians with more say in the occupied territories.

The ISGA would also improve the general quality of their lives by creating a fair and extensive framework enabling them to administer their own affairs.

This would include elections for a 15-member Palestinian Administrative Council (PAC) that would hold control over the vast majority of the areas of daily life affecting the Palestinian population.

It was mentioned by Levy that this was a temporary program to be tried on a trial basis and that success of this program could lead to further benefits for Palestinians and Israelis alike.

At the close of his presentation, Levy fielded questions by many of the college radio, television, and newspaper representatives present.

All questions were answered with the exception of one pertaining to Israel's view of the presidential race and which candidate seemed to best represent Israel's interests.

Levy refused comment in the interest of his own country and mentioned he would be more apt to answer that question once the election was over.

Financial Aid heavy on the minds of college voters

By John Williams
College Press Service

Financial aid is emerging as a major campaign issue for college and university students as President Bush and his Democratic rival Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton actively court the youth vote.

Representatives of college organizations for the Democratic and Republican parties agree that student loans and funding for higher education are fundamental issues facing both candidates. What they disagree about is how to make college more accessible to more people.

"The biggest problem students face right now is funding and student loan debt," said Jamie Harmon, president of the College Democrats.

"We now have a situation where some people aren't able to go to their school of choice or school at all because of lack of money. If they can get through, they're burdened with debt."

Tony Zagotta, president of the College Republicans, agreed that loans are a major issue facing students, but defended Bush's administration and its higher education programs.

Bush has proposed increasing the availability of student loans, but wants to cut back on the funding for grants.

"Democrats charge that this administration has been unfavorable to student loans. This is simply false," he said. "More is being given out than (in) any other administration."

Zagotta also slammed Clinton's proposed national trust for higher education.

Clinton has proposed a two fold program to make higher education affordable. Students taking out a government-guaranteed loans could pay them off through payroll deductions, or they could perform community service for two years.

"These don't have a lot of appeal. Young people want to enter the job market when they get out of college. They want choices and opportunity," Zagotta said. "While community service may sound fine, many would want to do other things."

Harmon described Clinton's plan as "revolutionary," saying the plan could "harness student idealism."

If the plan is enacted, students could get jobs they really want to take after graduating from school, rather than feeling pressured to take a high-paying job they don't want in order to pay off school debts, Harmon said.

Mike Dabadie, a project director for Wirthlin Group in Washington, which is a survey firm that works for conservative groups and the Republican Party, acknowledged that Clinton is ahead in every age group polled. However, he said Bush is getting the most support from the 18-24 age group.

premature. Flannery said, "There is no use in getting people's hopes up when there is little chance that there will be a lease."

Flannery declined to comment on the details of the lease and the cost of the purchase.

According to Michael Ronayne, the Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, it is unlikely that the university will acquire this property.

There is a meeting scheduled with Flannery in the near future in which he is expected to release this information.

Many other members of the Suffolk faculty were unaware of the negotiations, and were therefore unable to comment.

The university has been attempting to expand its facilities as a result of rising enrollment.

Suffolk President David J. Sargent, stated in a September issue of The Suffolk Journal, "Suffolk is considering the acquisition of several properties...The use of such property, depending on the location, is to be determined."

A similar situation regarding the acquisition of property occurred earlier this spring when the university was the highest bidder in a public foreclosure auction, purchasing the Women's City Club of Boston, located at 40 Beacon St.

However, the faculty and student body were informed that the university would not proceed with the purchase of the property in September.

The university is also actively pursuing the purchase of property at 110 Tremont St.

This property, consisting of two vacant office buildings, is a possible site for the law school.

The negotiations of the property at One Beacon St. were promising, however, the lease of the property now appears to be unlikely due to unforeseen budget problems.

Suffolk students choose Clinton over Bush, Perot

FENTON- The Suffolk Journal conducted an exclusive presidential issues poll on Monday. Thirty-two individuals, 20 men and 12 women, from the Fenton lounge and Sawyer cafeteria responded. Each respondent was asked five questions regarding his or her voter registration status, candidate preference, and issue concerns.

78% of those polled stated that they were registered to vote. The sample contradicts the demographics of the Metro-Boston area as a whole, which is a traditional Democratic stronghold. Republicans outnumber Democrats 28% to 24%, with 16% unenrolled, and 32% who did not specify party registration.

Of the seven unregistered students polled, 57% backed Perot/Stockdale, 28% endorsed Clinton/Gore, and 15% disliked all the candidates in this Presidential election.

Women favored 58% Clinton/Gore by 58%, while the men preferred the Perot/Stockdale ticket with 35%. Approximately the same percentage of men and women favored Bush/Quayle, who polled a strong third in the big picture.

Some of the comments which were offered include "Issue is the key word. H. Ross Perot is the only one addressing anything." Another ballot proclaimed, "Quayle in '96!" One observed, "At least Bush is trying. With a new Congress, he'll be much more effective."

The one issue which was overwhelmingly cited as being the most important for this election was the economy. Two other issues which were commonly identified were the deficit and U.S. trade policies.

Other issues mentioned were education, domestic policy, jobs, unemployment, equal rights, abortion, health care, term limits, defense, trade policies, inflation, Congress, and the Savings and Loan scandal.

Though more students favored Clinton, they were not as enthusiastic as the Perot supporters, who regarded the Billionaire's candidacy as a true catalyst for change, unlike Clinton's campaign rhetoric.

They said that Perot was the only candidate truly addressing the issues at hand, and not playing the political games of the Democrats and Republicans.

Only one of the students interviewed mentioned the theory that Clinton and Perot supporters may change their minds in the voting booth.

"When the curtain closes behind you, and push comes to shove, most people will stay with Bush because they trust him," said one student.

THE SUFFOLK JOURNAL STRAW POLL

Campaign '92

A poll conducted on October 27, 1992 of 32 randomly selected Suffolk students found the following results.

For President:

Bill Clinton/Al Gore	40%
Ross Perot/James Stockdale	28%
George Bush/Dan Quayle	22%

78% polled said they were registered to vote

Republican	28%
Democrat	24%
Unenrolled	16%
No response	8%

Freshmen have mixed views on voting for first time

By Michele Mosca
Contributing Reporter

There are many milestones in a person's life. A first date, a first good-night kiss, a first car, and the first time that a person votes in a presidential election.

True, voting in an election may not be nearly as thrilling as, say, a first kiss, however, for many students in the freshman class, voting holds an undeniable under-current of excitement.

Suffolk students in the Class of 1996 all hold the unique position of being the youngest voters this election year.

Albeit the freshman students may be the youngest voters, but they are by no means ignorant of the importance of voting. Those freshmen who have registered have, by now, pretty much decided who they are voting for come November 3.

Robyn Mitchell, freshman, CLAS, knows who she is voting for next month. "Bill Clinton, because I think that it's time to have a younger president and someone who will bring change to the country."

Denise Duran, freshman, criminology and law, said she is voting for Bill Clinton because "new ideas and a new perspective are what this country needs."

Freshmen who have decided to vote for Clinton generally made their decision based on the feeling that it is time to remove the "Republican regime" from office and hopefully bring beneficial changes to the government.

On the other hand, there are freshmen who believe George Bush is still our country's best bet. Denis Frasu, international business, said, "Bush ended the Cold War and brought stability to the world. Clinton doesn't offer anything. All Clinton wants to do is raise taxes and increase the deficit. I liked Perot, but there's no chance of his winning."

For freshman Chris Elan, neither Bush nor Clinton can hold a candle to H. Ross Perot. Elan says that he is voting for Perot because "H. Ross's straight talking makes him stand out above his two competitors."

Many freshmen voting for Perot feel that the Texas billionaire is the most straight-forward and honest of the three presidential candidates.

No matter who they are voting for, the freshmen class will not be entering the voting booths unprepared. Mitchell says she watched the debates and read the newspapers, in order to make her decision. Elan says he chose Perot after watching all the debates and reading up on all the candidate in the newspapers.

The debates seem to have been a major source of information for the majority of 18-year-old voters.

For Mitchell, the debates helped her realize that "George Bush is out of touch with the people and he did not seem comfortable speaking and answering questions at all!"

For Duran, "the debates helped the public see how our future leaders react to questions without having the ability to practice a speech someone else wrote for them."

Frasu said, the debates "allow individuals to see all the candidates together and how they differ."

The debates not only helped first time voters decide who they wanted for president. They also provided insight into the important issues. The economy was deemed the most important issue, followed by the state of education in America.

MADONNA!

Who's That Girl and what's her impact

By Mary A. D'Alba
Journal Staff

She's like a chameleon that changes when the mood hits her. Her look has gone from tattered fluorescent clothes with the "BOY TOY" belt to glamorous "Breathless Mahoney" in "Dick Tracy."

Her antics have caused much controversy and she has even received an invitation to meet with the Pope, which she politely turned down. Since her debut in the early 80s, Madonna has demanded the attention of the public eye. So why would someone actually want to study her?

At Harvard University, students are doing just that with the guide of Lynne Layton, Ph.D. Layton was at Suffolk on Thursday with "Who's That Girl? Madonna and Contemporary Pop Culture," the first in The Woman's History Speaker Series, sponsored by the History department.

Layton is currently writing a cultural biography entitled "Who's that Girl?" and teaches Madonna as a part of pop-culture studies at Harvard University.

Layton posed the question of "Why do people actually study Madonna?" One of the reasons why, Layton said, is Madonna is one of the dominating female forces in the music industry.

MADONNA- "The material girl"

"The only credit given to Madonna is that she is a marketing genius," Layton said. Her albums have sold millions, and she has brought a creativity to the music business. Layton went on to elaborate by telling the audience that Madonna's success is attributed to the idea that she is a "bitch" and/or "slut."

Layton cites the study of Laura Movy, a 1975 feminine film criticism, which states the entertainment industry is a male coded industry. "Men gaze at the woman on the screen; women are the people to be looked at," Layton said. Madonna shattered this practice.

The video "Lucky Star", the 1984 hit that brought Madonna national recognition, is a good example of this. In this video, Madonna poses and struts for the camera. She is part of the process of what is seen by the public.

Also, as much as the media would like to, there is not a set image that Madonna can be pinned down to as predictably her own. Layton says, "Madonna has multiple images, each and every one of them are a part of her, but she does not identify with any one image." Layton adds, "She (Madonna) strikes a blow against any fixed identities."

An example of this is in the video "Like A Virgin." Madonna jumps from the image of "slut," the shameless girl dancing on the Gondola to the image of "virgin," the gorgeous bride in lace and satin.

In addition, Madonna has brought underground dance to the forefront. The black homosexual and lesbian subculture was brought into the public light by Madonna using the dance "Vogue" in song and video.

Layton stated with this revelation, movies like "Paris is

Erotica: In A League of its Own

By Matt Maslin
Contributing Reporter

Madonna has finally crossed the line. Her albums have always generated commotion and, usually, controversy. In terms of controversial content, however, her most recent effort, Erotica, is in a league of its own.

One would have to have been living under a rock to have not heard of the controversy surrounding Madonna's Erotica and her infamous book of sexual fantasies, Sex.

Surprisingly, the album actually lives up to some of the hype. Without a doubt, the disc is very interesting. One must take notice of the parental advisory label on the front cover, for this album is not for the easily offended.

Just a glance at the Erotica cover sleeve reveals the general theme of the album. The front features a lusty looking close-up shot of Madonna. The back reveals the pop star sucking a man's thumb. The pictures inside are even more interesting, depicting her in several whip-wielding scenes of bondage.

As for the actual music, the long-awaited disc kicks off with the steamy title track, "Erotica," followed by a sultry cover of "Fever." Madonna's constantly suggestive voice is backed by a heavy dance beat which often becomes redundant and occasionally annoying.

Believe it or not, Madonna does stray from the solid sexual theme more often than not with songs like "Bye Bye, Baby" and "Deeper and Deeper." The emotional "In This Life" concerns the death of a friend from AIDS.

No album would be complete without a gushy love song, which Madonna provides with

Ghost story haunts Wesleyan University

By Karen Neustadt
College Press Service

Music students working late in the fine arts building at Nebraska Wesleyan University have reported hearing, in a vacant classroom, a piano softly playing and a woman's voice singing in the dark.

Scary? They swear it is true.

The legend of Clara Mills, a popular music teacher who taught at the school from 1912 until her sudden death in 1940, stays alive through the years, said Mary Smith, a professor of English who spends Halloween Eve telling ghost stories in student dormitories.

"I myself have never seen her," admits Smith, who says she is the "keeper of the legend" because she was on campus in 1963, when Clara was first seen.

According to the professor, a campus secretary saw the image of a slender, raven-haired woman in a long-sleeved white blouse and ankle-length skirt.

The sighting was investigated by Gardner Murphy, president of the American University of Psychic Research in 1964. Murphy claimed the secretary had been transported back in time, and had experienced a genuine phenomena.

Years later, when the building where Clara had suffered a fatal heart attack was torn down, Smith and a "ragtag" group of devoted Clara Mills fans went to the site, held hands, sang, and asked Clara to move to the fine arts building, where she allegedly has resided ever since.

Nebraska Wesleyan University, like many U.S. campuses, boasts a benign resident ghost, often a faculty member or student who died quickly and tragically. With Halloween just around the corner, a rash of sightings is to be expected, say experts in paranormal phenomena.

Friendly campus apparitions such as Clara Mills usually have earned a certain affection from the student body, and whether making a Halloween appearance or not, generally do not terrorize students.

Lure of Italy comes to MFA

By Annelie Slanemyr
Journal Staff

"The Lure of Italy" is a special exhibition currently showing at the Museum of Fine Arts. For the first time, paintings, water colors, and sculptures on this theme are put together from museums and private collections from around the country.

The exhibition features a collection of paintings and sculptures by American artists made in Italy between 1760 and 1914.

In 1760, Benjamin West was the first artist to take the initiative to go to this beautiful and inspiring country. Thirteen years later, West wrote a letter to John Singleton Copley in Boston and told him that Italy was the place to be.

Copley soon went to Italy, followed by artists Washington Allston, Thomas Cole, Albert Bierstadt, John Singer Sargent, and many others.

All of them studied classical art. Using modern art techniques, they copied works by Italian masters and reaching perfection in their tasks.

The exhibition consists of a great number of pieces of art. For example, there are seven paintings by John Singer Sargent. The beautiful colors in his paintings and the perfect interpretation of light make these paintings eye-catchers.

Also included in the exhibition are letters and notebooks by these artists. Jewels and crystal from this time period in Italy is also featured in the exhibition.

This exhibition is a beautiful collection of artwork by some very talented artists.

"The Lure of Italy" will be running at the Museum of Fine Arts until Dec. 13.

Burning" can be more popularized and she gave the black, gay, and lesbian subculture, according to Layton, "a political voice."

Layton explained that the high and low dichotomy is challenged by Madonna. The high dichotomy is the active individual in control, which is usually a male stance, while the low dichotomy is the passive individual in a submissive role, usually a female stance. Madonna defies this dichotomy by not taking the "accepted" low road. "Madonna constantly questions boundaries," Layton remarked.

Whether you love her or hate her, Madonna is someone to be talked about. Her goals are to make it to the top and stay there. Layton comments, "Madonna is a strong believer of hierarchy. Everything she has wrote or done has a hierarchy, and she is on top." Layton gives college students a new insight and understanding to "Who's that Girl?"

"Rain." "Theif of Hearts" is your basic catfight song about someone trying to steal Madonna's lover, sort of reminiscent of "My Boyfriend's Back."

A handful of songs are on the less offensive side. "Words" is about empty promises and dishonesty. "Why's It So Hard" is a plea for peace, love, and unity. "Bad Girl" seems to be more of a cry for help than the title suggests.

With songs like this, one might simply figure that the lyrical content of Erotica was blown out of proportion by the media. The title of the album is overall misleading. One might figure that Madonna has not really attempted to truly shock anyone, nor has she really stepped "over the line." This statement is wrong.

Sex is clearly the dominating theme of the album.

Madonna's lusty and seductive voice can make even a "Chipmunks" album a target for the Parental Music Resource Center.

For example, the song "Waiting" does not really include any sexually suggestive lyrics. Madonna's wistful moaning of the chorus, however, almost gives a new meaning to the song.

Madonna also gives us borderline suggestiveness with "Secret Garden," which contains a couple of words that could be misinterpreted, especially with the singer's always-hinting voice.

Finally, the album does contain the outright blatant. One of the offenders is "Did You Do It," which is pretty much a rap song. Sadly, Madonna does not sing too much on this one, but simply resorts to some background moaning.

The one song that is probably 50 percent responsible for the warning label on the record is "Where Life Begins." Perhaps the best tune on the album, this cunningly seductive anthem combines Madonna's seductive vocals with highly suggestive and rather intriguing lyrics and some mood-sparking background music.

Truth to be told, the album is impressive. Musically, the disc is your average dance-oriented generic Madonna sound. Obviously, the lyrics set it far apart from most other albums of the like, and keep it from being one-dimensional.

Everyone has heard about it. Sales seem to be soaring. Madonna is close to holding the titles for both pop queen and porn queen. Yet you have to question what is next for the Material Girl. After Erotica, you really have to wonder.

BOSTON- The New York Express Way is a mini food emporium consisting of the Stage Deli, Original Manhattan Pizzeria, and Osaka Express of Japan.

When you walk into the New York Express Way, the first thing you notice is the atmosphere. Multi-colored formica tables line up along the windows overlooking Cambridge Street. The customers can eat their food and enjoy the view.

The soft rock music being pumped into the room add to a feeling of relaxation, making it the type of place where students can hang out and enjoy a cup of coffee.

No matter what you are in the mood for, the New York Express Way provides a variety of choices. The Stage Deli serves 16 types of sandwiches, homemade soups, salads, and a delicious New York cheesecake.

The Stage Deli also serves a variety real New York bagels fixed a dozen different ways. The bagels are available throughout the day.

Osaka Express of Japan provides a variety of shrimp and chicken combination platters. These platters are served with vegetables, bean sprouts, and rice. If you still have a craving for Japanese food but do not have time for a sit-down meal, try the delicious appetizers.

Original Manhattan Pizza serves pizza by the slice or as a whole. The pizza is delicious, and there is a wide variety of pizza to choose from. Original Manhattan Pizza also serves Italian specialties, such as calzone and antipasto, which are quickly becoming favorites.

The prices are fair and daily specials are available. The New York Express Way is open seven days a week and is located at 106 Cambridge St.

At Rollins College in Winter Park, Fla., there is Annie Russell, a golden-haired actress who has floated, since her death in 1935, around a small campus theater named after her.

"I have never seen Annie," admits Rollins philosophy professor Hoyt Edge, who specializes in paranormal psychology. "But there are stories that students have told me. There are instances where they caught glimpses of a form. It's a sense that someone is there, a presence."

Edge reported stories that the elusive Annie has tampered with stage lighting and scenery. "I guess she had ideas about how plays should be produced," he said.

Then there is mischievous Florence Lee, a spirit that has haunted the Phi Kappa Sigma's rambling old sorority house at St. Lawrence University in New York's Adirondack Mountains for well over a century.

Florence, the daughter of John Stebbins Lee, the first president of St. Lawrence, lived in the house as a child until her death in 1860. Some residents claim to have seen Florence, in a flowing white dress, passing through the hallways.

Mysterious door slammings and unplugged stereos (particularly those that play rock

'n' roll) mean Florence is around, say sorority members. The reports prompted a visit in 1979 by the investigators of the infamous Amityville horror house.

While Rosary College, River Forest, Ill., does not boast such glamorous ghosts, they do claim that the three-dimensional stone faces at the entrance of the college's Gothic social hall were once inhabited by spirits.

School legend is that the faces, now sanded blank, once possessed clear features and would speak out, make noises, and, the eyes would follow passersby. To rid the campus of the spirits, says the legend, the school's nuns had a team of workmen sand off their features.

Kerry Gaynor, a California hypnotist who has investigated 800 hauntings, said that a haunted building on a university campus rarely poses any dangers.

"It (the ghost) may be up to something mischievous, but not dangerous. We are just frightened of something we don't understand," Gaynor said. "I have, however, suggested that people move if they are uncomfortable."

"Ghost sightings" may be far a more complex experience than simply glimpsing an apparition floating in the air, according to Edge, who says his philosophy is that of G.N.M. Tyrrell, author of "Apparitions" and president of the Society for Psychic Research in London.

"It's a standard theory that hauntings are a result of telepathically induced hallucinations. They are hallucinations in the sense that they seem to perform in ways that we expect them to: they have clothes, they have canes, they have horses and carriages.

"There is something that we produce. 'If telepathically induced, there is something. Maybe it's spirits. There is some residue that is picked up psychically, some information that is passed to us. For example, you see hauntings about people you don't know, and you put them in the proper haunting (environment)," he said.

Edge recalled organizing a hauntings investigation that entailed sending a Rollins student to spend the night in the gardens of an Orlando, Fla., art center, where a well-known apparition supposedly makes his home.

In the middle of the inky black night, when the top half of a male figure revealed himself to the astonished student, he dropped everything and ran.

"Scared him to death. He left all of his equipment...just took off," said Edge, chuckling.

Fabulous Phil

MARY'S DANISH - American Standard

This is a rocking gang of coeds out to do their own thing! Christopher Scott Wagner (bass), Gretchen Seager (vocals/harmonica), Julie Ritter (vocals/accordion), David King (guitar), Louis Gutierrez (guitar), and James Bradley, Jr. (drums), deliver a 13-song CD with the grace of a bull in a china shop!

This is great stuff, especially "Leave It Alone", which slapped my head across the room. "My Dear Heretic" is another suggested cut off American Standard, which I am sure you will not want to miss.

Trust me. Acquire a copy of American Standard and succumb to the audio thrills of songs like "Shotgun" and "Gotcha Covered". You will be surprised by their version of "I Fought The Law".

DAISY CHAINSAW - Eleventeen

I like it, I love it, I want more of it! Make it hurt, Daisy Chainsaw, make it hurt! Make it hurt, Daisy Chainsaw, make it hurt! Those with weak ears, beware. Daisy Chainsaw has hit the scene with an atom-bomb of an album! The first cut, "I Feel Insane", sets the mood with a harsh sound that might, at first, seem reminiscent of Transvision Vamp, until one realizes this is an original sound that is being not only squeezed, but also belted out.

"You Be My Friend" is crisp, clean, and a massive amount of caffeine. If you're in a car, going way too fast, then "Dog With Sharper Teeth" is a tune for you.

"Hope Your Dreams Come True" and "Natural Man" are unique ballads that touched my heart (sniff!). "Love Your Money" was an experience and a half, definitely among the strongest stuff this album has to offer.

"Lovely Ugly Brutal World" was unique and quite strange. Ditto for "Use Me Use You". "The Future Free" brought the tempo back up, but what's with the dry heaving?!

"Pink Flower" was a foot-stomping mosh specialty that was lovely! Remember that weirdness I was telling you about on "Lovely Ugly Brutal World" and "Use Me Use You"? Well, it's contagious on the last two cuts, "Waiting For The Wolves" and "Everything Is Weird".

Do you want adventure and fun for the ears? Eleventeen can provide it!

If you missed these guys at Great Woods, when they opened up for Santana, you blew it. Let the funk begin.

"Llama" kicks butt so hard, it leaves a major dimple. "Eliza" is an attractive instrumental and "Cavern" is a bobbing, slow funk tune. "Poor Heart" satisfies those with a hunger for country music, while "Stash" is a Spanish flavored piece.

With Mike Gordon on bass, Trey Anastasio on guitars, Page McConnell on piano and organ, and John Fishman on drums (all members handle vocals), Phish has no trouble in conveying raw musical talent into an entertaining picture of nectar, but that's not the reason for the album's title.

The title is actually a tribute to Nectar's, a bar in Burlington. Yes, you got it. These are local boys! So support your local band and listen to other tunes like "Glide," "Tweezer," and "Chaulk Dust Torture."

THE SAMPLES - No Room

"When It's Raining" is the start of a CD chock full of material made to make the head spin! I guess if you were to combine the Police, Squeeze, the Fixx, and a good handful of other bands, you might think you had come close to the sound these guys have, but you would not.

The Samples are easy to listen to without being easy listening. This quartet of Sean Kelly, Al Laughlin, Andy Sheldon, and Jeep MacNichol successfully entertain with music and lyrics that spark your brain. They have no trouble with harmony and maintain a "cruising" feeling from one song to the next.

"Nothing Lasts For Long" has ballad of the year pasted all over it. Kelly and company are definitely musicians with a purpose. Other songs that are highly recommended include: "Summertime," "Did You Ever Look So Nice," "Suburbia," and "Pain."

We can't tell you unless you tell us!

at the Democratic National Convention, Bill Clinton has kept in-house party fighting to a minimum while continuing to hammer away at Bush's and the republican record.

In his national campaign headquarter in Little Rock, Arkansas, there is a sign on the wall that says, "Don't forget the economy- stupid." Clinton has kept his campaign leveled on the theme of revitalization and economic recovery. His attacks on the White House have been exactly that, attacks on the current administration and not the person that heads it.

While overcoming the personal attacks that plagued his campaign through the primaries, Clinton has redefine the definition of a politician. If elected, he will become the first president born after World War II and beyond the grasp of the specter of the Cold War philosophy.

While personal attacks against Bill Clinton's activity during the Vietnam War are not entirely unfounded, the allegations demonstrate he reacts in the same way the ordinary person did in the same period.

During the first presidential debate, Clinton responded to the allegations made by President Bush, by saying, he was wrong for questioning his patriotism. He explained his commitment and love to his country, but his detest for the war in Vietnam. His beliefs were not any different than the opinion of thousand like him during the Vietnam war or the recent Persian Gulf war.

Bill Clinton made one of the wisest choices for a running mate in modern politics, Senator Albert Gore of Tennessee. Of the entire field of possible vice-presidential candidates in the democratic party, Gore represents the same generation shift as Clinton.

A one-time presidential hopeful in 1988, Al Gore is one of the chief crusaders for environmental protection and awareness. He has introduced legislation and written profusely on the need for environmental protection and cleaning up the polluted environment we have already created.

The choice of Gore by Clinton has, for the first time, balanced a presidential ticket on the issues and philosophy and not regional voting blocks and party politics. Together, they represent the most capable and powerful democratic candidates to run for the presidency since Kennedy and Johnson in 1960.

While Bush is running around the country screaming into the cameras about the "tax and spend" democrats that will bring double-digit inflation and uncontrolled spending back to government, he leaves out the record of the 12 years the republicans have controlled the White House. Under the Reagan-Bush administration, the government cut into domestic spending and programs, ran the country in a deficit while cutting taxes at all levels, but especially for the upper brackets, inflated the economy through a military build up, and left the government in debt $4 trillion.

Regardless of whether Arkansas has a balanced budget amendment to its state constitution, Clinton, in the 12 years he has been governor, has been able to meet the needs of the people while working with tightening federal support and the dumping of former federal programs to the states. Additionally, while manufacturing jobs have been lost on the national scale, Clinton has spurred industrial growth in Arkansas during this recession.

Clinton has proposed national health care, deficit reduction, tax increases on the wealthiest 10 percent in the country, and rebuilding the industrial foundation of the nation through a gradual process of recovery and rebuilding. While he has not promised a balance budget, he has said irresponsible borrowing to pay for governing has got to end.

While George Bush stared at his watch during the second debate, the American people saw him for what he really was, another incumbent running on the laurels of better days gone by. The contrast was never clearer than during those 90 minutes, Bill Clinton stood comfortable before the audience of 200 and the cameras that brought the contest into millions of homes and demonstrated how he has thought his agenda through. He knew how the American people were hurting and showed that he was thinking of them in his proposals.

And then there is H. Ross Perot, a billionaire who says he knows the hurting of the common people. While their messages are basically the same, Perot's more austere plan for the nation's ailing economy will do more harm than good. Proof is in the pudding; many of Perot's former advisors are not supporting the Clinton campaign and criticizing the get tough quick proposed policies of Perot.

Perot's best quality is that he is the candidate of protest. Voting for Perot is a referendum on American government and a signal of frustration. Voting for Perot only means a greater probability of re-electing George Bush or, on the outside chance, electing only the second independent president ever into a government dominated by entrenched and resentful political parties.

A vote for Bill Clinton is not a wasted vote, it is a vote for genuine change for the future. Our country needs leadership and a leader who is in touch with the people. The people who swarm around Clinton at rallies and appearances do so because he is the genuine candidate for change and hope for a better tomorrow. The candidacy of Bill Clinton and Al Gore is the choice of a new generation of Americans and leadership into the 21st century.

OPINIONS

Bush is the real thing

Brian E. Glennon II

The endorsements from the media are stacking up on the side of Bill Clinton for president, as the liberal news machine kicks in the final touch of their agenda against President Bush. Not unlike some monolith, the media has waged a continuous assault against the president since the early days of the campaign.

Now even the Suffolk Journal is weighing in on Bush bashing by endorsing Bill Clinton for president, showing a terrible mistake is being made on all levels of the media.

President Bush has been the target of an unprecedented media bombardment over the past few months. In this period of recession when we, or people we know, are falling victim to the tough times, we need something to reassure us that it's someone else's fault.

The easiest way to do this is by targeting a particular individual, guilty or not, who has had something to do with the process which caused the problem. We can then rally around that battlecry and take a course of action, in this case, dumping the incumbent president. In this way, we can feel that we have done something to solve the problem and better our situation.

The media has told us that the economy is in shambles because of President Bush. Think about it. Our economic system has peaks and valleys in each cycle. We had a super-high peak in the mid 80's, and since every action has an equal and opposite reaction, we are experiencing a super-low valley now.

The mass media has blasted the president on his economic record. Why? Because it sells newspapers. Here are some examples of Bush's economic policy which the mass media conveniently forgets to tell us:

Under the Reagan and Bush administrations, the United States economy increased by $2.8 trillion. That's like creating the total size of the German economy twofold. One in every six jobs is related to exports and exports have increased by 40% since 1988. That alone has created 1.8 million jobs. To grow is to trade and to expand is to compete.

A continued Bush presidency would benefit our local economy. $400 million in federal transportation aid has come to Boston for the Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel project, with more money to come. This has already created 10,000 local construction jobs.

We're living in an increasingly global economy. President Bush has proposed the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), legislation which will all but abolish trade barriers between the nations to our north and south. A North American economic power will be able to compete with the economic leviathan being created in Europe.

If the European Community finally becomes one economic power, it would be the largest and most powerful in the world. Japan's strength is just drop in the bucket to a united Europe. We must expand our economy by at least $10 trillion to remain an economic superpower. The NAFTA agreement is instrumental in doing this.

Historically, the real estate market has brought us out of recession. President Bush has proposed a cut in the capital gains tax to 15% and a $5,000 tax credit for first-time home buyers. Congress won't pass these initiatives because they are playing political hardball and want to see Bush out of the White House.

The president has been working in our best interest, but Congressional games have stagnated Washington. With a new Congress, President Bush will be able to continue his agenda for American renewal which will benefit us all.

While the economy is the most important issue in this election, character is an important issue for the presidency. The Oval Office is no place for amateurs. George Bush has proven his leadership capabilities time and time again. He's someone we know and can trust.

Bill Clinton has shown a pattern of opportunism since he was a "student leader." He has always done what's good for him, no matter what the situation. Millions of brave men and women have made personal sacrifices to serve in the defense of our country and the preservation of freedom worldwide. Bill Clinton slithered away from this duty.

It has been said that "those who cannot follow cannot lead." Clinton refused to serve and is therefore not worthy nor qualified to lead the United States Armed Forces.

Paul Tsongas said it best when he called Clinton "Pander Bear." He has told each group what they wanted to hear to the point of contradiction. If we really want such a manipulator for president, why not vote for Joe Isuzu?

Bill Clinton's whole platform is based on change. That's it. What does this mean? Change for the sake of change? We're smarter than that. What's his real agenda?

The "choice for a new generation" is Pepsi, not Bill Clinton. President Bush has worked for us. He's someone who cares and someone we can trust. When you look at the facts, the unbiased facts, the choice is clear. Re-elect President Bush.

French doctor the AIDS angel of death

Thomas Belmonte

Just for a moment, let's stop and thank God that the 1980's and their material mindset are gone. Since the closing of the "me decade" we have begun to see the aftereffects of what happens when an entire society is driven by selfishness.

From Ivan Boesky to Michael Milken the time was ripe for taking advantage of other people for personal financial gains. It seems our collective conscience was forgotten for the allure of wealth and power.

It seems as well that these acts of selfishness transpired globally, not just in America, as some experts in business ethics had thought. These acts of financial piracy are noted in places other than the well noted cases on Wall Street during the 1980's. Today I shall discuss one such case in France.

In 1980 Dr. Michael Garretta was the Director of France's National Blood Transfusion Center (NBTC). It was through his connections in the Socialist party of President Francois Mitterand that Garretta was able to obtain such a lofty appointment in appreciation for his party loyalty. He was the key leader in managing and planning policies for the NBTC and its subsequent problems belong to him.

Dr. Garretta was well aware that you never bite the hand that feeds you -especially in the world of politics. His job became more and more a political one, and less like the medical one that it was intended to be. Dr. Garretta like many other executives in the 1980's lost his sense of morality and social responsibility.

During the years in which Dr. Garretta managed the NBTC, France had blood supplies stockpiled with a worth of some $40 million dollars (The supplies became even more valuable during times of natural disasters). What seems to have been forgotten though, is that the NBTC dealt in blood, a necessity for life. Dr. Garretta and his staff treated their work as if they were running a Wall Street company with the idea of maximizing profit and not in saving human lives. This was a tragic error.

We now have found out in hindsight is that Dr. Garretta and his staff were not screening their blood supplies for the HIV virus between 1980 and 1985. As a result, over 1,200 people, most of whom were hemophiliacs, became infected with the HIV virus that is known to cause AIDS. According to the Boston Globe almost 300 of these infected patients have already died. This never should have happened because this was completely preventable.

The French doctors were well aware that in the United States doctors had already developed techniques to test blood supplies to determine if they were tainted with the virus that can lead to AIDS. Furthermore, the American science teams had developed a method of heating blood supplies to kill the HIV virus while still allowing the blood to cool and later be used for transfusions. Dr. Garretta and his staff did not choose to ask American authorities for this technology. As a direct result 1,200 people are now HIV positive.

The United States and France have been engaged in a race of sorts since 1980. Both nations have had technology to try and find a cure for the AIDS virus and both wish badly to be the one who finally finds the cure. Both nations want this credit so badly that they try independently of one another to discover the cure for the disease.

By 1985 the Louis Pasteur Institute had developed their own tests and cleansing methods for the HIV virus. France could now take credit for the accomplishment, and Dr. Garretta and the NBTC took much credit under their President. But by this time 1,200 people were known to be infected with the HIV virus including unsuspecting spouses and children. Another estimate claims that up to 5,000 people could have contracted the virus in this manner between 1980 and 1985. These doctors can be solely responsible for their own epidemic in France! Politics has no place in a question that determines life or death.

Dr. Garretta made himself the judge, jury and executioner for five years in France. He and his staff took it upon themselves to determine who would live and who would die. There have been serial killers throughout the world but never has there been anything quite like this. The only comparison that is even close to Dr. Garretta is to equate him to a second coming of Joseph Mengele. The Nazi angel of Death who persecuted and killed millions during the Second World War.

After the allegations of Dr. Garretta's crimes arose he resigned his post and obtained a visa to work in the United States. He has assisted the Haemonetics Corporation of Braintree since late July in their manufacturing of blood filtration equipment. This is clearly a poor judgement call. Never let the fox mind the henhouse!

In conclusion to this saga, Dr. Garretta and his staff have been brought up on charges and convicted in France. He will be extradited soon to face a four year prison sentence and a fine of $100,000.00 This slap on the wrist sickens me. I am no proponent of capital punishment but this is clearly not justice.

As a result Dr. Garretta and his family will now have to leave their Victorian home in Brookline and its $2,000.00 a month rent. In short, Dr. Garretta is forced in some small way to leave his lavish personal world that he built in the 1980's.

People have suffered and died at the hand of his decisions, and possibly he will gain some insight into what he has brought onto others. By the way Dr. Garretta they don't serve evian in chilled glasses in hell.

Opinion

Vote for Question 3 on Nov. 3

By Lorraine M. K. Palmer
Journal Staff

Do not let the industry-backed advertising campaign fool you. If Question 3 on this November's statewide ballot is passed, it will be the biggest environmental victory since the Bottle Bill. The opposition was wrong in that case, and it is wrong about Question 3, the Recycling Initiative.

Right now in Massachusetts we are throwing away more than six and a half million tons of trash every year. To put that in perspective, that is more than one ton per person.

Packaging, the target in question, makes up one third of that; 2 million tons of packaging. What is so outrageous about it is packaging is purposely made to be thrown away! So, while industry executives continue to avoid the threat wasteful packaging places on society, our environment is being literally trashed.

Half of the garbage produced in the Commonwealth is incinerated, and the other half is landfilled. Landfills are filling at such a speed, it is estimated that by 1996, there will be precious little space left to continue covering up the solid waste crisis. When garbage is incinerated, hazardous chemicals are released into the air, leaving tons of toxic ash behind, which has been linked to certain kinds of autism, as well as other health related problems.

More burying and burning is not the solution; recycling, reusing and reducing is. That is what Question 3 is all about, "the three R's."

The Recycling Initiative will require that as of July 1, 1996, all product packaging meet one of five packaging standards: Packaging must either be 1) reusable five or more times, 2) made of at least 25 percent recycled materials (35 percent by 1999 and 50 percent by 2002), 3) made of materials that are actually being recycled at a rate of 25 percent (35 percent by 1999 and 50 percent by 2002), 4) reduced by 25 percent every five years, or 5) recycled at a 50 percent rate.

The Recycling Initiative will be good for the economy as well as the environment. It will require packagers and retailers to make short-term investments that will pay long-term dividends, in the form of a statewide recycling market, which will create at least 7,000 new jobs in our communities, and fewer tax dollars going to pay for solid waste disposal.

Opponents of Question 3 are crying red tape, higher costs for consumers and ineffectiveness. "Red tape," a household dirty word, is used in the opposition's advertising campaign as a scare tactic. What is worse, a bureaucracy created for the good of the environment or the continuation of the burying and burning that has got us into this mess in the first place?

Do not let the big guys beat out the grass roots organizations who have nothing to lose but the environment. Join Governor William Weld in voting yes on Question 3 on November 3.

Letters to the Editor

Mr. Vining, we're not in colonial days anymore

I'd like to respond to Mr. Ron Vining's amazing article on "Family Values" in the September 23rd edition of the Suffolk Journal. I am sure that the readers will welcome another little piece on the subject.

Mr. Vining wrote of the moral decline in our society; that our country is spiraling downward. Mr. Vining is correct, but how does he suggest that we address the condition? Mr. Vining wrote, "We must return to the conservative family values that our country was founded on." Here, here.

And how much easier it was for families to make decisions regarding religious beliefs. The occasional Quaker hanging by the neck in the common helped convince all that "conservative" Christianity was indeed best for all, especially the Quakers.

Some of the great men of the time also had some pretty strong "family values." Ben Franklin, for example, is estimated by some accounts, to have had 108 illegitimate children, many by slave women, who, I'm sure, had no objection to propagating "family values."

Well, now that we know where Mr. Vining finds his ideal "family values," who does he propose to lead us there? Politicians, of course. But not just any politicians--Republican politicians. Mr. Vining suggests that Republican politicians are the ones that will bring us back to the "principles found in the Bible."

Mr. Vining also wrote that "in November, Americans will have the opportunity to elect men and women into political offices that will greatly determine the moral track in which our country will take into the year 2000." We may wonder with anticipation what our society will be like once we elect these all-powerful, all-knowing, all-moral Republicans and allow them to weave their "family values" into the fabric of our society. Well, we need only to look at what we have in our society today. For the past four decades, with the exception of two terms, Republicans have held the White House, and yet we still have this moral decline and annoying "downward spiral" that Mr. Vining wrote about.

Well, maybe four decades of Republicans in the White House just isn't enough. Perhaps we need four more decades, Mr. Vining might argue. This must clearly be the solution. We know that Democrats aren't the solution because Mr. Vining did inform us that "the Democratic Party has embraced a platform so liberal that the rights of conservative Christians are being violated in the interest of catering to special interest groups." That's right. Let's not violate the "rights" of "conservative Christians" by not allowing them to impose their religious, political, and moral beliefs on the rest of us, as they did the heretic Quakers of long ago.

Mr. Vining should be praised for his insight and ability to clearly see not only the ailments of today's society, but also their obvious solution: more Republican politicians. Here, here. Thank you, Mr. Vining.

Student Government approves activities budget

Congratulations on your recent engagement, the 700+ days will be gone before you know it! It is great to see that the Journal has room in the paper to feature personal articles. I am sure that there are a lot of other couples on campus who will look forward to seeing their picture in future editions. Keep them coming!

Well speaking of stories, it is good to know that the Journal has its reporters covering so many other newsworthy activities on campus and it is unfortunate that a reporter has been unable to make the weekly Student Government Association meetings, but this is what is going on. During the October 20th meeting, budgets for the fiscal year 1993, Student Activities Fee were finalized and unanimously approved. These budgets are as follows:

-Beacon Yearbook $23,000.00; Council of Presidents $37,304.00; Student Government Association $10,507.00; Program Council $54,189.00; Total Student Activities Fee fiscal year 1993...$125,000.00.

These figures are only the end product of weeks of presentations, Finance Committee meetings (a committee of SGA whose membership consists of, but not limited to a member from each class of SGA and the Treasurer of SGA), Allocation Committee meetings (whose membership consists of the President and Treasurer of Beacon Yearbook, Council of Presidents, SGA, and Program Council), intense deliberations, creation of a formula for figuring budgets, which ensured an unbiased and justifiable budget for all organizations (something that was formalized this year) and a lot of hard work by all the persons involved. We have also matched last year's record deadline for getting budgets approved.

A call to action

James Christian

The night is dark and a solemn silence has fallen upon the Franklin Hill Housing Project in Dorchester. The sounds of dogs ravaging through empty trash bins catches a neighbor's ears, who harp-hazardly dashes out to usher them away.

Meanwhile, a mother darts through her yard frantically looking for her two sons who should've been home four minutes ago; while a police car streaks down Blue Hill Avenue with a sense of urgency never seen before. Well probably with the exception of the one which went by yesterday afternoon, or the one the day before that, or the one that went by the day before that.

The Mother's thoughts flung back a week, to the day which Takeisha McNickles, 12, was found murdered on Fabyan Street, but her thoughts are abruptly stashed away as her two sons come running home. She hugs them both and glances to the heavens as she whisks them indoors.

An hour has gone by and the streets are virtually empty, with the exception of a drug dealer busily making a transaction to a well dressed woman in a 1991 Ford Taurus.

The brief moment of silence was suddenly shattered by a wailing cry which bellowed through the tranquil night.

"Nooooo," cried the angry voice. "Nooooo," cried the distraught voice, desperately seeking a means of escape, "I want him back."

For it was this night that the Angel of Death had made its rounds and this mother's 13 year old son, his body soaked in the warmth of his own blood, with a bullet hole pierced into his frail and heavy burdened back, lay flatly on the grounds as friends and relatives empty into a frenzy of horror realizing their latest loss.

Such horror had never been seen before. Well, probably with the exception of the week before, or the week before that, or the week before that.

Over the past three weeks, the Afro-American Community her in Boston has witnessed the tragic deaths of two of its most cherished possessions, McNickles and 13 year old, Dominic Mount.

What is so heart wrenching about these deaths is the simple fact that they were not the result of some unnatural power that we have no power, but instead were the harvests of a community which has been plunged into an abyss of despair.

Words could not describe the emotions which trampled through my every nerve as I read and saw how these two young children died a death which was not even deserving of a common criminal.

They were both hunted down like animals and slaughtered with brutal force while many of us were probably out partying, playing table tennis, reading Socrates or just "chilling out."

The brutality witnessed in these incidents was alarming and sent the "Community Leaders" scattering to find solutions to quell the rush of violence which has dawned its ugly face upon the Afro-American community once again.

"This is urban warfare," said John Dunham, manager of an area activities center. "We see strategy, no hope for our children."

For anyone who is familiar with the Afro-American community in the Greater Boston area, it's clear that There's a great need of direction to steer our youth away from the violence which has engulfed portions of our community.

It's with that in mind That I call upon every Suffolk student, especially those of color who may live in these areas, to make a commitment to themselves and their communities to aid in the rebuilding.

BSU working on community drive for homeless with X-mas

By V. Gordon Glenn III
Journal Staff

BOSTON- "To be a unified family," is how Jennifer Pollard, the vice president of the Suffolk University Black Student Union (BSU), described the goal of BSU this year.

One way this year's BSU is attempting this goal is by starting a food, clothing, and toy drive for needy children and homeless people in the Boston area.

"It gets rid of the stereotype that BSU is just about parties and fashion shows," said Pollard. "It shows the school that we can work together as a family and do something positive."

The program, unlike the other drives similar in nature, has a different target audience. The drive's main goal, said Pollard, is "to benefit our community."

"Many members live in and around the Boston area and we're taking it upon ourselves to help the people in our communities," she said.

Pollard made it clear that this drive is not just for black children and black homeless people. It is for all, regardless of race. She commented that most of the food and clothing drives that Suffolk sponsors don't get into the communities of color.

The exact places that will benefit from this drive have not yet been decided, but, Pollard said, the Shriner's Burn Institute, Pine Street Inn, Rosey's Place and Roxbury Community Health Center are among the places BSU is considering.

The toys collected by BSU will go to children in the homeless shelters and A.I.D.S. clinics to, Pollard said, "cheer them up," during the Christmas season.

The food and clothing are going to be geared towards helping people at The Pine Street Inn and Rosey's Place. Pollard reiterated that it was for everybody, but noted that "there are many people of color at those places."

She also said that the BSU has planned to have the food and clothing in packages with books inside, distributed personally by the members of BSU.

did yell a lot. He made Pearson run through several red lights and drive very fast.

"He seemed to be late for something and was in a big hurry," said Pearson. The car-jacker had also said that he had to get to wherever they were going before a person he had to meet left.

During their trek, Pearson said that he did a lot of maneuvering and tried to get pulled over by the police. At one intersection he said he purposely ran a red light trying to get the attention of a nearby police car, but the police turned in the opposite direction.

"I couldn't get pulled over, no one would pull me over," said Pearson.

The car-jacker had also asked a lot of personal questions during their trip. "Where did you go to school? What were you doing tonight? things like that," said Pearson.

"I told him I had studying to do and couldn't believe this was happening," said Pearson. He also told the car-jacker he went to Suffolk.

Ironically, Pearson was involved in another incident where a gun was pulled on him. He was the passenger in a friend's car, and they were making a three-point turn in a driveway in Wakefield, when a man jumped out of the bushes and started waving a gun at them.

Pearson reported the incident in Wakefield to the police immediately, but waited a week to report the car-jacking to the Boston Police, because the assailant took his address. He added, his family is very concerned about a break-in, because the car-jacker took his address.

Pearson described the car-jacker as a heavy built, black male, with short hair who is in his late 20s or early 30s, wearing a light brown winter coat, a blue baseball cap, and baggy jeans and he smelt of alcohol. The car-jacker had also told him he was from Worcester.

"My father had just told me about this [car-jacking] two weeks ago, I guess I should have listened to him," said Pearson.

The idea was born this summer in the minds of the newly elected executive board of officers: President Ayanna Yancey, Vice President Jennifer Pollard, Secretary Phaimyr Claude, and Treasurer Diane Clarke.

The drive is a reflection, Pollard said, on BSU's new theme: "Giving Back To Our Community."

The Drive began on October 13 and will run until December 18, the last day of finals. Deliveries will be done by BSU Members on the weekend before Christmas.

willing to inspire some of our youth on so that they may live a longer and more fruitful life.

We have always considered ourselves, being students in an institution of higher education as a very privileged populace. This is so because of the fact that we are in a position in which many before us have never reached, and many after us will probably never reach.

It's up to us to return to our communities and bring back with us some of the hope which we cling to. It's up to us to return and share our visions with those who may be lost and help direct them into a path of prosperity.

I pose the question to you this day. How long shall they kill our children, while we stand aside and look? I urge you, I plead with you, to become involved. It's a sacrifice worth making, It's a sacrifice which is demanded of us.

The midnight hour has dawned upon portions of our community and we must respond. We must not leave the fate of our children in the hands of a few drug pushing scoundrels, nor should we intrust it in a group of pourpetiers called black leaders who only try to lead when we bleed.

The time is calling for us to arise and defend the integrity of our communities spreading hope and unity. We must respond. So let's do what we know is needed, let us get more involved in our community. Brother Garvey said it best when he said, "Arise, ye mighty people, arise!!!"

Soccer season finally over

Soccer coach Constantine Perju

-Ed Brosnan/Journal Staff

Coach Perju came all the way to U.S. for this?

By Chris Olson
Contributing Reporter

Constantine Perju is the coach of the Suffolk Rams soccer team, but this outgoing Romanian is more than just a coach.

Perju has brought an impressive soccer resume to Suffolk University. From talking to Perju, one finds out that he has taken a long, winding road over the years before landing in Boston.

Growing up in Romania, Perju was like any other Romanian boy. He ate, drank and slept soccer throughout his childhood.

"Soccer is the king sport," said Perju. "Not just in Romania, but all Europe."

Perju excelled in the national pastime and quickly found himself playing professional ball at the age of 17.

He participated in the World Cup group games, taking on such high-caliber teams as England. Perju never did play in a World Cup game because Romania never advanced far enough to do so.

When asked about how the sports teams were treated in communist Romania, Perju answered, "They treat you very well. They have free schools and free colleges (for the athletes)."

So how and why did Perju come to America?

"I like freedom," he said. "I like to show my enthusiasm on the field."

Perju was the coach of a second-division team in Romania. The second-division soccer teams are not as good as the first-division teams. But if you can win your division, you can move up to the next one. Also, the team that finishes in last place of the first-division moves down into the second.

His team finished in first place and was slated to play a four-game tournament in neighboring Yugoslavia, another communist nation. Perju figured that since he and his team were traveling to another communist country, there would be no problems. He was mistaken.

"When the [travel permission] list came back to the police station, everybody was [allowed to travel] except the coach. I was the coach," he said.

"I was very frustrated," he added. "I was talking to my friend who was leaving on the Danube River, and I escaped with him. I couldn't stay anymore."

Perju crossed the Danube into Yugoslavia. He said, "In Yugoslavia, I stayed in jail one month, until my papers were clean."

Once he had permission, Perju went to Italy. There he stayed nine months in a refugee camp before being able to come to the United States in 1982.

He commented on his arrival to the States, "At first when I come here, the problem was language—I don't speak none, nothing. I was in Brockton High School taking language for a few months," he said.

At the same time, Perju was playing soccer for a semi-pro team in Taunton. Things were starting to happen for Perju in America. But as usual, nothing came easy for him.

Perju fell four floors off of a building and broke his pelvis and both of his arms.

"I came out [of the hospital] and I was very upset when I asked the doctor, 'Can I run? Can I play soccer?' He answered, 'You're lucky to be alive...don't even think about it.' So I was very angry and after eight months I started to play soccer by myself," said Perju.

Perju saw himself recovering nicely from the accident, so he decided to do some more coaching. He came to Boston and found out that he would have to start coaching at the youth level. So he coached two Boston Youth Soc-

Season was full of turmoil

By Edmond Brosnan
Journal Staff

The Suffolk soccer season came to a merciful end last Tuesday with a 2-0 defeat at the hands of Salve Regina, leaving the Rams with a final record of 1-9.

It was a disappointing season for the Rams who were trying to improve on their 3-7-1 record from last year. Suffolk had better players this year, but they were not able to work together as a team for various reasons.

Head coach Constantine Perju explained, "Last year we didn't have any stars, but we played together as a soccer team and we passed the ball more."

Perju noted that the skill level was higher this year, but that some of the players did not get the rest of the team involved in the games.

"It seemed to me that the Spanish players did not want to play with the rest of the team. They only wanted to play with each other. They would not pass the ball to non-Spanish players," Perju said.

Another problem with the soccer team this year was that many of the players did not go to practices. There were only three or four players who went to practice on a regular basis.

By the end of the season, just these few showed up for practice, and on one day just one player was at practice.

Perju stated, "You can't have a real practice with only a few players. You can't develop the team if the team is not there."

You can't work on the plays that you want to.

"Last year we usually had 14 or 15 players at practice, so we were able to learn to play as a team. Sometimes we only had 8 or 9 players, and I thought that was bad, but this year was unbelievable."

The season started on a bad note, as Suffolk lost to an inferior Curry College team, 4-3 in overtime. The Rams did not have a real goalie at the beginning of the season, and all of Curry's goals would have stopped by someone who was experienced in the net.

Suffolk's goals were scored by John Nyakurimwa, Joao Barciela, and Esteban Errandonea, with Errandonea's coming on a penalty kick after he was hauled down in the penalty area, which gave Suffolk a 3-2 lead.

Curry's Erik Carlson tied the game with one minute left to send it into overtime, and then Bruce Whitney completed a hat trick to win the game.

Perju was upset at the loss, but said after the game, "This was our first time playing together [while Curry had already played four games]. We haven't had a chance to scrimmage anybody."

The season hit a low the next game when Suffolk got into a bench-clearing brawl with Wentworth Institute of Technology.

Three Suffolk players and two Wentworth players were

ejected from the game, and then the referees suspended the game with almost twenty minutes left because, as one of them said, "Nobody here wants to play soccer. Everybody just wants to fight and argue."

The fight started when Suffolk's Endre Kristiansen was punched in the stomach by a Wentworth player, which was not noticed by the referees. Then Kristiansen kicked the player in the leg, which was noticed by the referee, and Kristiansen was ejected from the game.

As he was walking off the field, Kristiansen turned around and went after the Wentworth player that had punched him, sparking the fight between the two teams.

Kristiansen and Walter Escobar were each suspended for four games for their part in the fight, and Mariano Nora had to sit out the mandatory one game for being ejected from a game.

The Wentworth player who was in the original scrap with Kristiansen was taken to the hospital for cautionary x-rays on his leg, which turned out negative.

His mother called Suffolk Athletic Director Jim Nelson to complain about the incident and even talked of suing the school. Nelson called a meeting of the team, in which he told them, "When you are out there on the playing field, you are not only representing yourselves.

"You are also representing Coach Perju, the University, and everybody who is involved with the school."

Perju commented, "This fight was our fault. We can not accept this kind of behavior, and this is why we suspended the players. I am positive that this will not happen again. We are going to talk about discipline more from now on."

Nelson also told the team that "the soccer program is in a fragile state. We have to build a reputation as a team that wants to win soccer games."

And the team went out and did that in its next game. The Rams beat Worcester State College 4-2 in a game that was closer than it should have been.

Suffolk scored three goals in the first 11 minutes of the game, and it looked like it would be a blowout. The Rams went away from their game plan after this, though, and let Worcester St. back into the game.

Perju said, "We were passing the ball well at the beginning of the game, and they couldn't stop us. Then, everybody wanted to be a star and score a goal, so they started to dribble the ball, which hurt us."

Worcester St. came back and made the score 3-2, but Suffolk put the game away mid-way through the second half on a nice goal from 30 yards out by Daniel Andrade.

This would be the only win of year for "The Bad News" Rams.

One of the toughest losses of the season was an 8-4 defeat at the hands of Framingham State, in which Framingham St. scored four goals in the last 10 minutes of the game.

The biggest blowout of the season was against a strong Bridgewater State team. The Rams lost that game 8-2, but they discovered a new goalie in Tatsuya Nagasue.

He came in late in the game and did well, establishing himself as the starting goalie for the rest of the season. Nagasue could not bring the Rams any more victories, however, because of the constant barrage of shots on him and an ankle injury. Nagasue does give the Rams hope for next season.

The Rams played their best in a 5-2 defeat at UMass/Boston. UMB was the best team that Suffolk played this year. They were able to keep up with the Beacons in the first half and were only down 1-0 at halftime.

UMB blew the game open in the second half of the game, scoring four goals. Perju was not upset about this loss.

He said, "The defense and the midfield did exactly what I said. UMass is the best team in the league and we played well against them."

One of the reasons that Suffolk was able to play well against the Beacons was that Perju used five defensemen instead of the usual four.

Overall, it was a horrible season for the Rams. They had hoped on improving on the gains that they had made last year, especially with some better players on the team this year.

One of the major problems with the team is that many of the players can not control their temper and get into arguments with the referees and other players while the game is being played.

Also, some players do not treat their teammates and coach with the proper respect, according to Perju.

Perju explained that if the players could just concentrate on the game and let him worry about the officials, they would be a much better team.

He said, "It is true that the refs sometimes make mistakes, but you can not worry about that when you are on the field. Once the ref makes a decision, he will not change it, so it is pointless to argue."

Perju's main concern is the lack of team play, however. "I hope the Spanish players will play more with the other people on the team next year," he said.

We'll have to wait and see.

Former Baseball Coach Tom Walsh

Former Suffolk baseball coach elected to Park League Hall of Fame

Journal Staff

BOSTON - Former Suffolk University baseball coach, Tom Walsh, has been elected to the Boston Park League Hall of Fame and will be honored with eight other new members at a dinner Friday, November 6, at Lombardo's in Randolph.

Walsh served as Suffolk's head coach from 1974 to 1980 and prior to that played several years in the Park League, playing third base primarily for the Supreme Saints and posting a career .349 batting average.

Walsh stated, "It's quite an honor. A lot of good players have played in the Park League. It is the oldest amateur twi-lite league in the country. To be recognized as one of the best, among thousands, is great."

A former Boston Red Sox farmhand and combat Army veteran of Vietnam, Walsh is presently Northeast regional scout for the Milwaukee Brewers baseball team.

He grew up in Mission Hill, Roxbury, and graduated from Mission High School. He holds bachelor of science and master of education degrees from Suffolk University.

He makes his home in Dedham with his wife, Diane, and two daughters, Jennifer and Julie.

Walsh is very proud of his time spent at Suffolk. He explained, "I credit Suffolk University for giving me a great baseball background, which has helped me tremendously in life."

Radio talkmaster Avi Nelson will serve as toastmaster for the dinner, the 11th annual alumni reunion.

cer teams: an under-14 team and an under-16 team.

"We did pretty well," he said. "We have trophy for champions of under-14's and second place for under-16's." Perju coached youth soccer for three years.

He then moved up to coach at Catholic Memorial High School for three years before taking the coaching job at Suffolk.

This is Perju's second year at the reigns of the Rams. He sees a distinct difference between last year's team and this year's.

He said, "Last year, we don't have too many individual good players. We had a team last year. This year we have more individual, skilled players. We don't have a team."

Most of this year's talented players hail from Spain and other parts of Europe.

On the subject of this year's team, Perju stated, "It's my impression they [the foreign players] ignored the American players. Really, I don't like it. They think they're much, much better than American players. This was one problem, so I tried to mix the team [not playing an entire line of foreign players]. Sometimes it worked, sometimes it didn't."

Perju also takes into account that most of the Spanish players arrived only six days prior to the season-opener.

He added that the European players are too set in their roles as individual players and that they don't like strict rules. They'll seem to learn something, but go back to their old habits quickly.

When asked about the bench-clearing brawl that occurred when the Rams played Wentworth Institute, Perju gave his version of what transpired on the field.

"I jumped to separate the players," he said. "Never do I have any intention to hit anybody. I don't like anybody to hit our players, so I tried to stop it."

Perju was without the services of Endre Kristiansen for the rest of the season, but not as a direct result of his suspension handed down after the fight. Kristiansen was also plagued by a previous injury that kept him out of the lineup.

A lack of manpower was most likely the determining factor that led to Perju's team's losing record of 1-9.

After all he's been through, Perju still thinks about his homeland. He visited Romania this summer. He insists that what you may see on the news about the people of the eastern-European communist countries gaining more and more freedom every day is totally wrong.

"It's worse now," he said. "Just the name is democratic. The government still has control. Just the name was changed."

"What they need really, but this is a big decision, is this new generation to clean completely the government," he added.

Finally, Perju commented on today's American soccer scene. With the World Cup coming here for the first time ever in 1994, American soccer seems to be on the rise. But its popularity seems to be limited to the younger generation. Older people claim that the game is boring and there's not enough scoring and action.

Perju said that the game of soccer is not about wide-open scoring and a lot of offense. There are two teams out there, not only trying to score themselves, but trying to hold back the other team's attack. He thinks that there is a lot of strategy in the game.

"The score is usually tight, 2-1 maybe."

Perju has been through many experiences, both on and off the soccer field.

And after what he's been through and what he's dealt with in his life so far, coaching a soccer team must be a piece of cake.
