SUFFOLK STUDENTS ONLY

STALEMATE ON "CAP" ISSUE

by Andrea Norton

The SGA Student Senate, in its capacity as the student government body of the University, has been facing a significant challenge in the form of a "cap" issue. The cap, which has been a part of the ongoing debate in campus governance, has reached a point where a solution seems elusive. The "cap" issue is centered around the question of how much the Student Senate should be able to charge for its services and programs.

Dr. Robert Ackermann, President of the University, has stated that the cap issue is not just a financial matter, but a question of democratic governance. He has further stated that the SGA must be able to charge for its services in order to function effectively. However, many students have expressed concern about the potential for the cap to lead to an increase in tuition costs, which would be detrimental to their educational experience.

In light of these concerns, the SGA has been working to find a solution that would satisfy both the students and the administration. The SGA has proposed a "cap" that would allow for a reasonable increase in fees, while still ensuring that the costs are kept under control. However, this proposal has been met with resistance from various quarters, including the administration and the student body.

The SGA is committed to finding a solution that will benefit all stakeholders. It is hopeful that through continued dialogue and negotiation, a mutually acceptable solution can be found.

Columnist Alan Lupo reflects on his career

by Sandy Miller

Alan Lupo, 57, is a graduate of Suffolk University's journalism program. He's lived in the Bay Area for much of his life, and he's worked as a journalist for over 30 years. He's written for various publications, including the San Francisco Chronicle and the Sacramento Bee.

Alan Lupo reflects on his career in journalism, the challenges he faced along the way, and what he's learned from his experiences. He discusses the importance of perseverance and坚持 in the field, and the importance of staying curious and open to new experiences. He also touches on the evolution of journalism in the digital age, and how he navigates the challenges of today's media landscape.

Lupo says that one of the biggest challenges he faced early in his career was finding his voice as a journalist. He says that he spent a lot of time trying to write in a certain way, but that it was only when he embraced his own style that he was able to find success.

He also talks about the importance of networking and building relationships in the industry. He says that he's always tried to be friendly and approachable, and that it's paid off in terms of building connections and finding opportunities.

Lupo is now a senior editor at the San Francisco Chronicle and is the author of several books, including "The SF Chronicle Guide to the Bay Area" and "The SF Chronicle Guide to the US West Coast." He's also a frequent contributor to the Chronicle's "Ask the Expert" column, where he answers questions about the Bay Area and its residents.

Lupo is a native of New York City, but he's lived in the Bay Area for the past 30 years. He and his family moved to the area when he was a teenager, and he says that it's always been home to him.

Finally, Lupo talks about his advice for aspiring journalists. He says that the most important thing is to keep writing and keep learning. He says that there are no shortcuts to success in the field, and that the only way to get there is through hard work and dedication.

Study? Study! Study.

by Linda Todeschini

You can study and gain all the knowledge you want, but if you don't apply it, it's useless. The key is to use what you've learned and apply it to real-world situations. This will help you develop critical thinking skills and make you a better problem solver.

Remember, knowledge without application is just noise. You need to be able to apply what you've learned in order to be successful. So, why not start applying what you've learned today? After all, it's never too late to start learning or growing.

Flawed Teachers still passes

Paula Zechan

A flawed teacher makes her first appearance in "Wild Life has no life," a comedy written by Paula Zechan and directed by Robert Dineen. The teacher, played by Lisa Frenz, is a woman who has just been fired from her job at a local high school. She is struggling to find a new job and is looking for a way to make ends meet. The teacher is joined by several other characters, including a student who is enthusiastic about the teacher's ideas and a principal who is not so sure. The play is a satire on the state of the education system and the challenges facing teachers today.

Commentary

By Laura Ambrose

Christmas came to and a two months' much-needed for the New England Patriots. courtesy of Coach Bill Belichick and the team's impressive play in December. The team was able to turn its attention to training for the playoffs, which began in the form of practice and games. The Patriots, led by quarterback Tom Brady, had a great start to the season with a victory over the New York Jets in their first game of the year. The team then went on to win their next four games, including a decisive victory over the Buffalo Bills in Week 7.

The team's success continued as they faced the Houston Texans in Week 8. Despite a valiant effort by the Texans, the Patriots were able to come out on top with a score of 28-22. This win solidified their position at the top of the AFC East standings, and they continued to dominate in their remaining games. The team's strong performance throughout the season earned them a playoff berth, and they went on to win their divisional round game against the Tennessee Titans.

In the AFC Championship game, the Patriots faced off against the Indianapolis Colts. While the Colts put up a good fight, the Patriots proved too strong, winning with a score of 41-28. This victory set them up for their first Super Bowl appearance since 2017.
