Two refugees tell their story

by Regina Gillis

Yasna was a student on San Salvador's island of Utila when 1982. While she was attending the national university, in San Salvador, she studied religion and bought books from young people in the streets.

With the help of an intelligence, Yasna was able to form a group of concerned neighbors about the situation. The CIA says that Yasna was a member of the National Guard.

Before 1979, Yasna's family was a group that lived in the streets of San Salvador. She said that this was the best thing that happened.

Yasna told her family and friends about the businesses on the streets of San Salvador. She said that this was the best thing that happened.

Yasna explained how the death rains reached the VHF and vaccinated students.

The mixed emotions of Insignificance

By Joe Seeger

In 1961, playwright Edward Albee wrote Insignificance, which was based on a true story of a man who was killed by a car on the side of the road. The play was performed on Broadway and was a critical and commercial success. It was directed by Edward Albee himself and starred a cast of unknown actors. The play was praised for its innovative use of time and space, and its exploration of the nature of human existence. It was also noted for its dark and pessimistic view of life. The play was nominated for several Tony Awards, including Best Play and Best Direction. It was also performed in several other countries, including England and Australia. The play has been revived several times, most recently in 2005. The director of the revival was John Guare, and the cast included such well-known actors as John Lithgow and Danny Glover. The revival was praised for its powerful and moving performance. It was a critical and commercial success, and it was nominated for several Tony Awards, including Best Revival of a Play.

The cross-country rundown

By Mike DeFlorio

The cross-country season is upon us. The Eagles and the Pack are both going to be very strong. The Eagles have a strong returning core and the Pack has a lot of depth. The Eagles are the team to beat in the NFC East.

1. St. Louis Cardinals

The Eagles have had a great start to the season. They have won their first two games and look like a team that can make a deep run in the NFC. The defense has been strong and the offense has been clicking. The Eagles are the team to beat in the NFC East.

2. Washington Redskins

The Redskins have been strong in the early going. They have won two games and have a tough test ahead against the Eagles. The defense has been stout and the offense has been good. The Redskins are in a good position to make a run in the NFC East.

3. Minnesota Vikings

The Vikings have been surprising early in the season. They have won their first two games and have a tough test ahead against the Packers. The defense has been good and the offense has been inconsistent. The Vikings are in a good position to make a run in the NFC East.

4. Dallas Cowboys

The Cowboys have been strong in the early going. They have won two games and have a tough test ahead against the Giants. The defense has been good and the offense has been inconsistent. The Cowboys are in a good position to make a run in the NFC East.

5. Philadelphia Eagles

The Eagles have had a great start to the season. They have won their first two games and look like a team that can make a deep run in the NFC. The defense has been strong and the offense has been clicking. The Eagles are the team to beat in the NFC East.

Suffolk women offer perspectives on Nairobi

by John Maddocks

Lauded for its well-developed network of universities and colleges, Nairobi, Kenya is considered a vibrant center of higher education. A recent trip to Kenya by Suffolk University students provided an opportunity to explore the academic landscape of this dynamic city.

In this article, we present perspectives from three female students who participated in the trip: Eliza Johnson, a senior in the School of Business; Sarah Kimani, a junior in the School of Arts and Sciences; and Olivia Ometa, a junior in the School of Professional Studies.

Eliza Johnson

Eliza Johnson, a senior in the School of Business, found the experience to be eye-opening.

"I was impressed by the level of academic rigor at universities in Kenya," she said. "The students are very dedicated and work hard to achieve their goals.

Eliza also noted the challenges faced by students in accessing quality education. "The cost of tuition is high, but there are also scholarships available for students who demonstrate financial need," she said.

Sarah Kimani

Sarah Kimani, a junior in the School of Arts and Sciences, shared her insights on the cultural aspects of the trip.

"The people are friendly and welcoming," she said. "I was struck by the vibrant markets and the diverse array of local foods available.

Sarah also highlighted the impact of the colonial era on Kenyan culture. "The architecture and urban planning reflect the influence of British colonial rule," she said.

Olivia Ometa

Olivia Ometa, a junior in the School of Professional Studies, discussed her experiences with fieldwork.

"I was fortunate to have the opportunity to work with a local non-profit organization," she said. "The experience was incredibly rewarding and gave me a deeper understanding of the challenges faced by communities in Kenya.

Olivia also praised the warmth and hospitality of the Kenyan people. "The people were very kind and welcoming," she said. "I made many new friends who I hope to stay in touch with in the future.

Conclusion

The trip to Nairobi was a valuable learning experience for the Suffolk students. They gained insights into the academic and cultural landscape of Kenya, and developed a greater appreciation for the challenges faced by students and communities in this dynamic city.

Undergraduate students interested in participating in future trips to Kenya should contact their academic advisors for more information. Suffolk University continues to expand its global reach, offering students unique opportunities to engage with cultures and communities around the world.
