With the major renovation of the student center taking place in the fall, it is fitting that we show appreciation for the student workers. Our student center, which has been a hub of activity for many years, will undergo a transformation that will benefit both students and faculty. The renovation is a testament to the dedication and hard work of our student workers, who often work long hours and under difficult conditions.

Date rape is not seduction

By Linda Tedeschi

Date rape is not seduction. It is a violent act that occurs when a perpetrator manipulates a victim into participating in sexual activity against their will. The perpetrator may use coercion, threats, or physical force to compel the victim to engage in sexual activity.

In these cases, the perpetrator may use psychological tactics such as isolation, manipulation, or intimidation to prevent the victim from seeking help or escaping. The perpetrator may also use force, threats, or violence to control the victim and prevent them from resisting.

Date rape is a serious crime that affects many people. It is important to understand the dynamics of date rape and the potential consequences for victims and perpetrators. It is crucial to recognize the signs of date rape and to take action to prevent it from occurring.

Drexler denounces Accuracy in Academia

by John Maddox

In an address to the Academic Advisory Committee, J.D. Wexler, vice-president for academic affairs, denounced the practice of "accuracy in academia." Wexler claimed that the practice is "a form of political correctness that has spread like a virus throughout the academic community." Wexler also called for a "return to traditional values" in the classroom.

Although Wexler's comments were met with criticism, the Academic Advisory Committee voted to support his position. The committee cited concerns about the "bias" of certain professors and the "influence" of political correctness on academic freedom.

Robert K. Merton, a professor of sociology at the University of Chicago, expressed his disagreement with Wexler's position. "I believe that the practice of "accuracy in academia" is essential for the maintenance of academic freedom," Merton said. "It allows us to challenge ideas and to engage in healthy debate.

Wexler's comments also sparked a debate among faculty members. Some professors praised Wexler for his stance, while others criticized him for his "anti-political correctness" views.

Numerous students also weighed in on the issue. Some students supported Wexler, while others opposed him. One student said, "I think Wexler is right. We need to get back to the basics of education."

Another student disagreed, saying, "I don't think Wexler is right. We need to keep up with the times and with the changing world."

The debate continues as the academic community grapples with the issue of "accuracy in academia."
