Drexler denounces Accuracy in Academia

By John Madden

St. John Madden

The Sunday Herald, a weekly newspaper in St. John's, has announced that university officials have been found guilty of negligence and malpractice in connection with the death of a journalism student. The student was killed in a car crash that occurred on campus during a fraternity party.

The student, who was a junior at the university, was a member of the journalism department. He was killed when the car he was driving hit a tree on the edge of campus. The university has been criticized for its handling of the incident, which occurred just weeks before the student was due to graduate.

The Herald reports that university officials have been found negligent for failing to provide adequate supervision of the fraternity party. The university has also been criticized for its handling of the incident, which occurred just weeks before the student was due to graduate.

Suffolk University School of Management is host to the annual meeting of the New England Association of Colleges of Business Administration. The meeting will focus on how business schools will meet the unique challenges of the eighties.

Thursday, November 7 - 10:30 a.m. - 8:00 p.m.
Friday, November 8 - 8:00 a.m. - 2:00 p.m.
Sheraton Hotel - Boston
Charles Ping, President. Ohio University
John Hoy, President. New England Board of Higher Education
Deans and administrators from approximately 35 New England business schools

Faced with a shrinking prospective student population and curricula under attack from within and outside the academic community, business schools are being forced to re-examine basic assumptions. Among topics to be discussed at the annual meeting are: current and future market for MBA students and strategic planning for business schools.

Suffolk students join the Bloodline

Brian Hayes: A poor well taken

Suffolk students join the Bloodline

By Linda Federich

AIDS is an epidemic which is getting the attention of almost everyone. The word that has been used to describe all of the public health problems of the 80's. By the end of the decades more than a million Americans will be infected with the virus that causes AIDS. In the United States alone more than 100,000 people have died of AIDS related illnesses. If the epidemic continues as it seems to be doing, it is likely that the AIDS crisis will become the single greatest public health threat of the 80's.

It is clear that we need to take a careful look at how businesses will meet the unique challenges of the eighties and how the business schools will respond to the changing needs of the students who will be entering business schools in the future. Are you at risk for AIDS?

By Linda Federich

AIDS which is acquired through sexual intercourse, contact with infected blood or through the use of contaminated needles can be transmitted by heterosexuals, homosexuals, and intravenous drug users. About half of those who are infected are gay men. Currently, over 60% of all AIDS cases have occurred in the gay community. By the end of the decades more than a million Americans will be infected with the virus that causes AIDS. In the United States alone more than 100,000 people have died of AIDS related illnesses. If the epidemic continues as it seems to be doing, it is likely that the AIDS crisis will become the single greatest public health threat of the 80's.

People have the same type of sexual contact as heterosexuals, the same risk of being infected by a contaminated needle and the same risk of being infected by an infected blood. If the epidemic continues as it seems to be doing, it is likely that the AIDS crisis will become the single greatest public health threat of the 80's.

AIDS awareness has increased dramatically with the growing public concern about the dangers of AIDS. In the United States alone more than 100,000 people have died of AIDS related illnesses. If the epidemic continues as it seems to be doing, it is likely that the AIDS crisis will become the single greatest public health threat of the 80's.
