Background: South Africa

Film, speaker discuss S. Africa

By David Grant

A film and discussion by a South African student at the Revere Cinema yesterday presented a perspective on the state of South Africa and its residents. "Apartheid," presented by David Frank, a South African student at Suffolk University, focused on South Africa's struggle against the effects of apartheid.

Frank, a South African student at Suffolk University, presented a slide show that highlighted the effects of apartheid on the South African economy, society, and culture.

The film, which was produced by the South African Broadcasting Corporation, included interviews with South African residents, including a journalist, a labor activist, and a lawyer. The film highlighted the effects of apartheid on the South African economy, society, and culture.

The film also included a discussion of the impact of apartheid on the South African economy and society, with Frank providing commentary and analysis.

In addition to the film, Frank also conducted a discussion with the audience, answering questions and providing further insights into the topic of apartheid. The discussion included a review of the historical context of apartheid and its effects on South Africa, as well as its ongoing impact on the country.

Frank's presentation lasted approximately one hour and concluded with a Q&A session, during which the audience had the opportunity to ask questions and engage in further discussion about apartheid's effects on South Africa.
