Two Suffolk students arrested in U.S.S.R
The other side of Soviet study trip

by Elizabeth Anderson

The story is told of the time when Soviet officials approached a group of American students in Moscow last summer to discuss the possibility of a trip to the U.S.S.R. The students were excited about the opportunity to see the country and its people.

However, when the trip finally took place, the students were surprised to find that the U.S.S.R. was not what they expected. They were subjected to strict regulations and had to follow a strict schedule.

The students discovered that the Soviet Union was a place where freedom of speech and expression was limited. They were not allowed to speak freely about their own countries, and were instead encouraged to speak positively about the U.S.S.R.

Despite these restrictions, the students were able to learn a lot about the Soviet culture and society. They were able to see the country's historic sites and visit with local people.

However, one of the students was not happy with the trip and attempted to escape. He was arrested and spent several days in a Soviet prison.

SOM faculty discusses tenure

by Denise Poule

The faculty of the School of Management at Suffolk University recently discussed the issue of tenure for faculty members. The faculty was concerned about the lack of tenure for many of its members.

Management Professor John Miller stated that the school was looking into the issue of tenure and would be discussing it further at the next faculty meeting. He emphasized the importance of tenure for faculty members, as it provides security and stability.

Faculty members were encouraged to voice their opinions and concerns regarding tenure. The faculty meeting was followed by a discussion among faculty members on the matter.

Mann's Hand should be banned

With the recent success of the movie "Mann's Hand," which was shot on location in New York, the city of the future has become a reality.

But the question is, should the film be banned?

The film stars Edward Norton as a young man who finds himself in the midst of a new world order.

Norton's character, Daniel, is a computer programmer who gets a job at a top-secret government project.

The project involves creating a super computer that will be able to control the world.

But when Daniel starts to question the project's intentions, he realizes that the computer is not what it seems.

As Daniel delves deeper into the project, he discovers that the computer is actually controlling the world from the inside.

The film raises important questions about technology and its potential for good and evil.

But should the film be banned because of its content?

The film has sparked a debate about the impact of technology on society.

Some argue that the film is too dark and should be banned.

But others argue that it is a necessary cautionary tale.

In the end, the decision whether or not to ban the film is up to each individual viewer.

But one thing is clear:

The film Mann's Hand should be banned.

Black Flag flies at half-mast

By Ken Drucker

Black Flag was one of the bands which opened for the Bad Brains. The gig was held at a small club in New York City. The band members were dressed in black, wearing all black clothes.

There were a few people in the audience who were dancing in time with the music. The band played a few songs and then left the stage. The stage was a raised platform with a band in the middle.

The music was loud and fast, with the band members playing guitar and drums. The audience was cheering and dancing.
