28 Derne St. renovation set for February

28 Derne Street: renovation set for February

by David Grady

Suffolk University's $2 million plan to renovate 28 Derne Street could begin as soon as next February, according to Francis X. Flannery, Suffolk's Vice President and Treasurer.

The Derne Street property, which neighbors the Fenton Building, was gutted two years ago in what arson squad officials call a suspicious fire.

Flannery told the Suffolk Journal that agreements have been reached with Beacon Hill residents and the Boston Zoning Board that will allow Suffolk to redevelop the building once bidding for the contract is completed.

According to Flannery, the plans and specifications for the building are expected to be completed by this December, and the bidder who wins the contract could begin construction in February of 1988.

Renovation of the four story brick building could take up to 18 months, Flannery said.

The student organizations and offices currently housed in the Ridgeway Student Activities Building will be moved to new office space in 28 Derne St. upon completion of the renovation, Flannery said.

The Derne St. building will be directly linked to Fenton several feet in from the sidewalk, a concession Suffolk made to Beacon Hill residents initially opposed to the renovation.

"We'll move the access-way back so the buildings won't look too big together," Flannery explained.

Flannery recently told The Boston Ledger that a classroom might be included in 28 Derne.

Fire swept through 28 Derne St. in September of 1985, and a Suffolk University patrolman was arrested and charged with burning the building.

Charges against the patrolman were dropped at a probable cause hearing at Boston Municipal Court in October of 1985, and the arson squad is still investigating.

Suffolk bought the Derne Street building last year from Boston realtor and Suffolk Law graduate John Bennett — a purchase pivotal in the school's 19 year struggle to redevelop the Ridgeway Building.

The university had been negotiating with the Beacon Hill Civic Association (BHCA) and the City of Boston since 1968 to structure on that site. Although settlement was reached two almost years ago in a suit brought against Suffolk by the BHCA, several Hill residents filed an independent suit against Suffolk's proposed usage of Ridgeway.

Suffolk's plan to relocate the student activities office to the newly acquired Derne St. building prompted settlement of the second suit earlier this year.

"All the people against Ridgeway were for 28 Derne," Flannery said.

Once 28 Derne St. is renovated, Suffolk will seek final approval from the City of Boston to raze the Ridgeway Building. Blueprints of the new Ridgeway have already been drawn up. The current proposal is a brick building that includes a basement gymnasium, a first floor bookstore and faculty offices in the upper two floors, according to Flannery.

The exterior of the proposed Ridgeway building will give the appearance of three overlapping brownstones that "will fit in nicely with the neighboring buildings," Flannery said.

Suffolk's new appointees

Suffolk University President Daniel H. Perlman announced last month the appointment of Nancy Stoll as new Dean of Student Services.

Stoll will replace Dean Bradley Sullivan, who retired last June after 20 years at Suffolk.

In an August 3 memo addressed to the Suffolk University Community, Perlman welcomed Stoll and cited her impressive resume, praising her "clear understanding and appreciation for urban commuter students in the 1980's."

Stoll comes to Suffolk with a decade of experience in college student services, including administrative positions at Brandeis University, Simmons College, and the College of Wooster.

She has a long list of professional affiliations and activities, including most recently the title of At-Large Member of the Executive Council of the American College Personnel Association.

Stoll is affiliated with the American Association for Higher Education and the National Association of Women Deans, administrators and Counselors.

Stoll was appointed new Dean of Students after months of interviews with prospective candidates conducted by the Search Committee, headed by Dr. Kenneth Garni.

"I'm very pleased to have the opportunity to work at Suffolk," Stoll says. "I was real happy to meet some of the students during orientation week, and I look forward to working more closely with them."

Majorie Hewitt has also joined Suffolk University's administration, replacing Margaret Higgins as Assistant

Director of Student Activities.

Hewitt comes to Suffolk with several years experience in working with college students. She was Assistant Director of Student Activities at University of Bridgeport in Connecticut, worked at Bridgeport State College and Fairfield University.

She most recently worked at the Sheraton Boston.

As Asst. Dir. of Student Activities, Hewitt will help student organizations plan functions and fundraisers.

Hewitt says she met with EDSA (Evening Division Student's Association), the Program Council and student orientation leaders last week while becoming familiar with the school.

"As soon as everybody gets back into school we can all get working on some programs," she says.

"Land Swap" proposal hailed as "brilliant idea"

By David Grady

State and city officials are embracing a proposal to move Suffolk University to the Lindemann Mental Health Center — a plan that would effectively result in the "swap" of Suffolk's buildings for the New Chardon Street site.

According to Robert Owens, President of the Beacon Hill Civic Association (BHCA), the proposal by former Boston Redevelopment Authority (BRA) Director Ed Logue to trade Suffolk's property for Lindemann Center is under "very active consideration" by the state.

The proposed trade — which if approved could take up to 5 years to complete — has been hailed by present BRA Director Steven Coyle as "a brilliant idea."

"When you see Logue's plan, you say 'that makes sense,'" Steven Coyle, current director of the BRA, recently told the Boston Herald. "Those buildings have a grandeur that would be perfect for the university."

Francis X. Flannery, Suffolk's Vice President and Treasurer, told the Journal that Logue's proposal is "under consideration" by the Board of Trustees.

"At present, it (the Lindemann Center) would be uneconomical to run. They'd have to agree to restructure the building to suit our needs."

But, Flannery added, the benefits of the land swap could outweigh the problems.

"It has parking for 350 cars. We'd be able to get out of our rented spaces. We'd have one-third more space, a gym and a swimming pool," Flannery said.

The BHCA's Owens speculated that his organization would not oppose the land trade.

The Lindemann Center: Suffolk's new home?

"That's off the top of my head and doesn't reflect the BHCA position, but I don't think the BHCA will oppose the move."

Once the proposed renovation of the Lindemann Center is complete, Suffolk would move in and Logue would begin converting the campus buildings into condominiums.

The proposed trade Suffolk for the Lindemann Center is part of a larger plan to redevelop the sagging North Station area. Almost 400 units of middle income housing are planned for the area surrounding the Hurley and Lindemann buildings on New Chardon Street known as the Bulfinch Triangle.

Approval for the proposed land swap and Bulfinch redevelopment must come from the state, and, according to Owens, Logue will lobby Suffolk's many graduates in the Legislature for support.

Student Financial Aid files accidentally trashed

by Rick Dunn

Several Suffolk students awaiting tuition assistance for this semester feared the worst when they did not receive their rewards from the Financial Aid Office on time. Those students that went to find out where their financial aid was instead found that the Financial Aid Office had no files on them. According to a letter sent to some 25 students (last name beginning with C or D), an "Overzealous cleaning crew" disposed of the files while performing latenight janitorial duties.

The "trashed" files, which were

COMMENTARY

A Challenge to SGA

By David Grady

Always fashionable, last year's Student Government Association hopped on the bandwagon and took part in a rally lobbying for Suffolk's Trustees to disinvest its moneys from companies conducting business in South Africa.

Though their intentions were good and many seemed true to their convictions, members of the SGA couldn't help but convey a sense of trendy social awareness at their rally last February. Forming a picket line outside the Sawyer Building just before a scheduled Board of Trustees meeting, SGA members and scattered faculty members chanted anti-apartheid slogans that soon degenerated into a mishmash of grievances. Cheers for divestment soon turned into jeers against a proposed tuition hike and eventually everybody at the rally was chanting for and against their favorite causes.

At their meeting, the Board of Trustees voted against divestment and raised tuition by almost 9%.

Another low point in SGA's 1986-1987 history came when the vital motion to have pencil sharpeners installed in classrooms came under much serious discussion.

Such trivialities in the face of larger issues may have been responsible for the appalling number of uncontested SGA Representative seats in last year's election. It could also explain the frightfully low turnout of voters in said election.

The challenges facing this year's SGA go far beyond pencil sharpeners and appropriations for SGA weekends. Suffolk is close to expanding into 28 Derne Street and renovating the Ridgeway Building, moves that will effect scores of students and all the student activities.

Pickets protest Trustee's meeting

Suffolk's AIDS policy has been deemed secret, leaving students to guess where the school stands on the issue.

And Suffolk's tenure policy is a mystery.

A Student Government Association is supposed to be a viable instrument of change, a voice through which the student body in its workings, (that means each representative getting out there and making themselves known) SGA can gain the confidence of students. And with the students behind them, SGA can prove itself a vital part of policy making that the Trustees can't ignore.

Until this happens, the Trustees will continue to look out their windows at the well meaning pickets below and raise tuition and keep its money in South Africa, oblivious to the concerns of students.

To the Editor:

With all this brouhaha regarding the Suffolk University "police" let me add a few of my own thoughts: first, deputizing the "police" here, I believe, would let them carry guns, among other things. I for one do not need more men in uniforms with guns strapped to their waists. The only time I like to see gun-totting, uniformed policemen is in the MBTA station and in the neighborhood where I live. From all accounts I've read in the Suffolk Journal these men don't seem to be trained sufficiently to have firearms. Who are they going to point their guns at or shoot? The rude students who stand at the front of the elevators in the Sawyer building and let the doors close without pushing the "open door" sign? Gee, on second thought those persons should be shot! Are the "police" going to shoot the cooks in the Sawyer cafeteria for the awful food or inflated prices? And hey, what about that female "security" cop? She's a darling little tiny chick in a very tight uniform, with matching 3" spike heels and matching belt — can she run to catch a "perp" — or is it just the style and I'm out of date? Let's keep the "security guards" doing what they do best: chit chat with students at their monitoring booth in the Sawyer lobby; cluck sympathetically when someone reports to them that their briefcase or pocketbook has been stolen or just standing around looking for "suspicious" characters.

A student who is tired of these never-ending, boring news items!!

One Flew Over
Beacon Hill

Considering the sometimes schizophrenic history of Suffolk's relationship with Beacon Hill, there's more than a little irony in the current proposal by former Boston redevelopment Authority (BRA) head Ed Logue to trade Suffolk's campus for the Lindemann Mental Health Center.

The proposal itself may be a sane idea, adding a considerable amount of breathing space to Suffolk's cramped quarters, but when looked at carefully, ideas, actions, and statements of principal players in the continuing saga of Suffolk's expansion shows a pattern of bizarre behavior.

A good many of us were still in diapers when Suffolk began negotiating with the powerful lobbying group known as the Beacon Hill Civic Association (BHCA) to renovate the Ridgeway Building.

The BHCA wasn't particularly happy about the proposed usage of the Ridgeway Building, so they complained the old fashioned way — they sued.

After years of negotiations and concessions on the parts of Suffolk and the BHCA, the lawsuit was settled. But the happiness of the settlement didn't last long, and, like a classic manic-depressive, Suffolk's powers-that-be again found themselves in the throes of sadness when an independent group of irate yuppies from the Hill sued.

Meanwhile, Suffolk found a new toy to play with in the form of 28 Derne Street-therapy through real estate, if you will.

Out of left field came a little misplaced aggression by an alleged torching of that building. Arson squad officials are still investigating that "suspicious" fire.

Since a burned out building is bad for Beacon Hill's image, Suffolk's proposal to renovate it and move the student activities offices there prompted settlement of the second suit.

Or, as one Suffolk official said, "all the people against Ridgeway were for 28 Derne."

... Maybe there will be a little room left over in the Lindemann Mental Health Center for those split personalities who couldn't make up their minds.

Adding further credence to the theory that schizophrenia has run amok on the Hill, consider some statements made by a few prominent Beacon Hill leaders.

In his sporadic periodical The Beacon Hill News, editor Dan MacMillan likened the planners of the 1986 version of Ridgeway Lane to "barbarians at the gates."

This statement came between lawsuits when everyone was supposed to be friends.

Shades of Sybil?

Despite the fact that Beacon Hill residents are in favor of the proposed land swap, many on the Hill still bitterly refer to Ed Logue as "the man who ripped down the West End," referring to the former BRA chief's role in the infamous city expansion plan that resulted in the displacement of hundreds of middle income Bostonians.

Considering the conflicting emotions and ideas mentioned above, a mental health center is the perfect place for Suffolk to move to.

We'll be leaving one loony bin for another.

Board of Trustee's promotions

Linnehan named Chairman;
Fulham Life Trustee

public relations photos

Atty. James F. Linnehan of Lowell has been elected chairman of the Suffolk University Board of Trustees, President Daniel H. Perlman announced in July.

The board also elected Suffolk President Emeritus Thomas A. Fulham of Wellesley Hills a life trustee of the university. Fulham had served as president from 1970 to 1980.

Linnehan is a 1956 graduate of Suffolk University Law School with law practices in Lowell and Boston. He succeeds John S. Howe, retired chairman of the Provident Institution for Savings. Howe will remain a member of the board.

A certified public accountant as well as a lawyer, Linnehan was the first alumni representative elected to the Suffolk Board of Trustees in 1976. Following that three-year term, he was voted to a five-year term and subsequently to another five-year term in 1983.

Linnehan received his Bachelor of Science in Business Administration degree from Northeastern University and was also graduated from Bentley College. He specializes as a defense counsel in tax cases in Federal and Massachusetts courts.

In addition to his practice in Lowell, he is associated with the law offices of Coyne, Hodapp and Linnehan in Boston. A member of the Federal, Massachusetts, Middlesex County and Lowell Bar Associations, he is a commissioner of the Lowell Historic Preservation Commission and a director of Bay Bank Middlesex. He is also a member of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, the Lowell Chamber of Commerce and St. John's Hospital Men's Guild in Lowell.

Linnehan and his wife, Katherine (Chadwick) are the parents of six children, James Jr., Thomas and Timothy, all lawyers, John, a certified public accountant, and Susan, a paralegal.

Thomas A. Fulham, elected a life trustee to succeed long-time trustee John Griffin, who died April 28, served as president of Suffolk longer than all but one of his predecessors, Gleason L. Archer.

James Linnehan

During his tenure, Suffolk experienced its greatest growth, adding three new buildings and remaining debt free. Fulham also served as chairman of the Association of Independent Colleges and Universities in Massachusetts, which represents more than 50 institutions of higher learning.

Thomas Fulham

Fulham, who previously served eight years as a Suffolk trustee before succeeding Judge John E. Fenton in the Fall of 1970, is a corporator at Babson College and serves on the board of trustees of his alma mater, Holy Cross College, St. John's Seminary, and the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institute. He and his wife, Annette M. (Healey) are the parents of nine children and have five grandchildren.

AROUND TOWN

by Tuesday Tanos

Whether as an alternative to dorm life, or an answer to it, many students will be scouring Allston for a place to call their own. Most choose Allston for its low-cost housing or the easy accessibility of the green line and its close proximity to local universities and Kenmore Square.

Both those reasons can be misleading. The rate of rent in Allston has increased steadily every year. And as for the Boston College trolley that travels Commonwealth Ave., it is always overcrowded and frequently breaks down (especially in bad weather). The trolley is infamous for running so slowly and making so many stops, trips would probably be faster if walked. But no matter how much Allston has going against it, students continue to make it their home away from home. It is this huge number of young people crammed into the few blocks of Beacon St., north of it and Comm Ave. up to the Boston University bridge that earn the area called Allston the dubious title as "The Student Ghetto." For those who will be living there next year, there are a few things you should know.

Papers on the sidewalks and in the gutters, flyers posted on all the buildings, the first thing parents notice about Allston is how dirty it is. Among the residents of Allston, there is a general apathy about their neighborhood. Little or no community pride exists, but that should be expected in this college town.

Allston is the home of the poor and the pseudo-poor. Although college kids from the majority of Allston's population, more permanent local residents are senior citizens and Vietnamese families.

The neighborhood businesses reflect their clientele. Some are ethnic and service almost strictly to Vietnamese consumers. Others are geared more towards the students.

Most of the establishments in Allston Square, the intersection of Harvard Ave. and Comm. Ave. are restaurants. Almost all are inexpensive and almost all are Greek.

Allston

Arthur's Seafood, is a Greek restaurant that offers some seafood dishes. Actually, the food and the service are excellent, and the prices are very reasonable. In Allston, there is a deluge of sub and pizza places, the best of which is on Comm. Ave., called the International House of Pizza ("Home of the Biggie"). It offers hearty portions of the best Greek-style pizzas and subs you'll ever have. The best restaurant in Allston is Dom's on Brighton Ave. It is an Italian restaurant, so small and quaint, it seems out of place here. Few Allston residents can afford it, but if you do go there, you can easily see why it was nominated "Best of Boston" for Italian food for two consecutive years.

Breakfast in Allston is like nothing you've ever experienced before, young people crawl out of the woodwork and everyone looks as though it really hurts to be awake before noon. The Greek Deli King on Comm. Ave. is the trendy place to eat. Cafeteria style offers much of a selection very quickly. The Greek Steve's Kitchen on Harvard Ave. is the cheapest place to eat breakfast in Allston. It is a personal favorite. It offers a large breakfast for a little more than two dollars, extra grease no charge. The Seven Stars restaurant is Greek with a nice fast food flare. As you stand at the counter and watch them cook your meal, your order seems to take only seconds to prepare. No matter which restaurant you go to in Allston, you'll be taking your life into your own hands. So choose wisely and carefully. There is only one warning to heed — avoid the Grecian Yearning on Harvard Ave. like the plague.

When grocery shopping in Allston, there is only one real choice, the Purity Supreme on Harvard Ave. The prices are reasonable and delivery is free. Village Fruit is closer to Allston residential areas, but like all neighborhood food shops you pay more for their convenience.

In Allston you will find more liquor stores than in any other area its size in Massachusetts. During a 12 minute walk down Harvard Ave. one will pass three major liquor stores, but there is a reason to shop each. Marty's Liquors is the biggest and perhaps the most reasonable to frequent. They have an excellent deli counter and their warehouse size allows them to charge the cheapest prices in town. Blanchard's, Allston's second largest liquor store, is never as busy as Marty's. But because they are notorious for not requiring an I.D. from their customers, many students choose to shop there. The liquor store adjoining Purity Supreme, although it carries all types of alcohol, specializes in wines and caters to the more refined palates. They also charge a little more, but chances are if your looking for a brand that's hard to find, you'll find it here.

When choosing a laundromat, there are two choices: Fern's Cleaner's on Brighton Ave. and Maytag Self Service Laundry which is directly across the street from it. Fern's is cheaper, but it's often crowded and noisy with small children. Maytag seems to cater strictly to students who study while they wash.

Clothes shopping in Allston is not recommended. With stores like Illusions, Tello's and Zams, it is a fashion victim's paradise. Unless one can afford the over-priced vintage clothing shops, like Fabola and Allston Beat on Harvard Ave., I strongly suggest you do your shopping down town.

Other businesses that seem to be abundant in Allston are Realtors and hardware stores. On every block there are at least two of each. With students moving in and out of the area all the time, both are in great demand.

The largest subject to cover is the Allston nightlife. Most residents make the nightly trek to Kenmore Square. Others prefer to attend one of the common large college parties that can be heard throughout the neighborhood on weekend nights. The clubs and bars in Allston vary as much as people's tastes: Molly's and Club Soda for dancing, Bunratty's and the Paradise for live music, Stitches and Play It Again Sam's for comedy, and Great Scott's and the Kinvera Pub for folk music.

Allston isn't a bad place to live and as one resident put it, "Lots of restaurants, lots of pizza places, lots of liquor stores, it's all a student needs."

By Joseph Mont

A man is the sum of his memories, and because of this fact, for better or worse, a good percentage of my psyche will always be tied to Braintree, Massachusetts.

The town is trapped between the city and the country in a netherworld called suburbia. Gingerbread houses with white picket fences dot the landscape, and on many a green-green lawn Mr. and Mrs. Average American watch over their two-point-two children and pure bred collie dog. This town is the embodiment of the American dream in many respects. It is a "Brady Bunch" nirvana.

Braintree is a town of consumers. The town's centerpiece is the South Shore Plaza, a gleaming Camelot to teenage girls, (and as a result teenage boys). Within the plaza's automatic doors mini-skirt clad capitalists charge their parents into bankruptcy and blow a weeks worth of Mewages earned by working behind a greasy McDonald-land counter. Don't be fooled by the misnomer though, the plaza is not a plaza at all, but a fully enclosed mall. About 10 years ago the owners decided that open air shopping was a thing of the past, so they added a roof, pumped in some Muzak and watched their stocks soar. Filene's and Sears, hearing the siren call of a mew mall, set up shop and the rest is consumer history. One word of caution though, before you enter the mall, plaza, or whatever it is, lock your car, and attach your crook hook and other assorted anti-theft devices. The plaza ranks as the number one car theft spot in the state.

Across the street from the plaza is the majestic looking Sheraton Tara hotel. An inn designed to look like a Middle Ages castle. Bellmen dress as beefeaters and busboys dress like squires and pages. A culinary tip: although the hotels "Upper Crust" restaurant seems to gather a lot of local praise, respect, and business, it hares a lot of the same menu and staff with the smaller, less expensive cafe upstairs.

For a really good Italian meal try "Bella's", a first class yet inexpensive restaurant down the road. "Jimbo's", a seafood spin-off of "Jimmy's", across the street from "Bella's", draws mixed reviews but it still might be worth checking out.

Most of these restaurants serve the luncheon crowd, and early evening diners. Braintree is not yet a haven for the late night set. The main after hours hang out seems to be the "Howard Johnson's" across the street from the plaza, next to the South Shore Cinema; mainly because of employees from both the plaza and Tara convening after work to tie one on. A nightclub in the Tara itself might be another possible night spot, but it suffers from an unbearably cheesy atmosphere decorated in early Newton, as in Wayne, who the lounge singer seems to be imitating. To have some fun, get loudly drunk, and when the singer asks if there are any requests, belt out a desire to hear the theme from "Shaft", blowing his prearranged Barry Manilow playlist out of the water. The clubs' name is the "laurels", even though many locals know it as the "Knaughty Knights Club"; whose name and image quickly changed when it was discovered that some knaughty ladies of the evening had set up shop, serving the needs of countless brother Johns.

For a somewhat different form of late night diversion try the Braintree Drive-In, (whose neon sign reads Br n ree rive- n). During the summer this dinosaur of the movie industry still continues to sell stale popcorn and stale movies to a crowd that just needs someplace to steam the windows and play sexual baseball. If you don't want to put up with a Lady and the Tramp, Megaforce double bill, you might still want to check out the drive-in's traditional Sunday flea market. A buck ushers you into the fabulous world of black velvet paintings (Elvis!, the sad clown!, the bullfighter!, the tiger!, the naked woman on the couch!). Over in a corner a tattooed biker pushes his wares. His table consists of some old porcelain figurines, some old magazines, and an old home edition board game of "Concentration". Oooh, look! A "Welcome Back Kotter" colorforms set! It's only mising a principal Woodman, and a bargain for fifty cents. Sorting through some old records yields an archaeological find of some "Singing Nun" albums as well as hits from Eddie Albert (he sings Simon and Garfunkle songs), and the cast from "Sesame Street". "Excuse me sir how much for the hula girl lamp?"

Braintree is also a town of history. The names of some former Braintree residents are the names of history: John Hancock, the Adams family, (John and Quincy, not Gomez and Morticia), General Sylvannus Thayer, are just a few. Sacco and Vanzetti gained notoriety on Pearl Street, at

Rock stars' pet project fails

by Rick Dunn

Back in the 70's it seemed as though every tousled-haired bimboy with a famous name (i.e. Shaun Cassidy) was making millions regurgitating rock standards. That trend has appeared to end — making way for the new trend of already famous singer bastardizing old hits — but on the Williams Brothers, debut disc Two Stories, the nephews of famed crooner Andy Williams bring back too many bad memories of singers like Cassidy, Leif Garrett, Andy Gibb, and (oh No) Rex Smith. It would be unfair to classify the Williamses along such anti-luminaries as those above, but it is real hard to take them seriously when their album notes read like a seating plan for last year's Grammy Awards.

The Williams Brothers — guitarist Andrew and singer David — are spoon-fed material by rock giants Bob Dylan, Stevie Nicks, Tom Petty and the Heartbreakers as well as having various Heartbreakers play the music. One cannot get over the feeling that the Williamses are the mascots of the 70's Southern California Rock clique.

The album begins nicely with a cool reading of "Some Become Strangers," a smooth pop number that gracefully glides across the shiny no-stick production work by Madonna's producer Pat Leonard. It is as agreeable as any other piece of pop confection, but an unnecessary one considering Stevie Nicks already gave a much more ethereal interpretation of the song on her 1985 Rock a Little album.

Once past the first song the album kicks out a series of bad covers of some great songs. The Williamses limp harmonies and Heartbreaker Mike Campbell's big volume production choke the living hell out of "Straight A's in Love," a sly new song from Bob Dylan, as easily as it fumbles Stevie Nicks' riveting "You Like Me." Tom Petty's "Keeping Me Alive" just doesn't function melody wise with an off key vocal by David Williams.

The rest of their repertoire, including "Rain Came Down" co-written with Jules Shear, consist of songs that are all punctuated by meticulously arranged synth wallops at every turn.

Two Stories best serves as a preview of some of the material that Dylan, Nicks, and Petty will do on forthcoming albums, and hopefully such good stuff won't go to waste. As for the Williamses and their future-hopefully someone will decide to redo "The Hardy Boys," because it is not a good thing when the company a band keeps is more interesting than the band itself.

what is now a run down sandpaper company. Braintree citizens are proud of their historic contributions. Teachers tell of how the first East India Tea Company protests were ours; and of how the civil war saw the heroism of our own Ebenezer Thayer.

The Thayer family seems to have a monopoly on most of the legends and notoriety of Braintree's past. A private school is named after the illustrious family. A duo of public libraries stand in their testimony. A must for any third grader is a trip to the Thayer House, where the children are issued colonial names such as Chastity and Prudence by retirees who don Hester Prynne designer clothes and show the field trippers how to bake bread, churn butter, and make bayberry candles.

Across the street from the Thayer House is the second town hall (the first one burnt down in 1911). On the town hall's lawn stands Braintree's statement to the future, our time capsule. Erected in 1976 as part of the Bicentennial celebration the capsule holds a wide array of the town's icons, both priceless, and worthless. Included in the collection is a list of the names of all of the towns citizens, copies of the federal, state, and town constitutions, some photographs, a "T.V. Guide", a phone book, and a tape of some news events, music, and speeches. Directly beside the town hall is Frenche's Common, where you can watch little leaguers pop fly balls during the day, and rowdy teenagers fight and drink at night.

For nature lovers Braintree has pond Meadow Park, an excellent spot for biking, hiking, fishing, and drinking. Also good for fishing is the Braintree Dam. During the summer you can see scores of little boys hunting around for snapping turtles. Further hiking trails can be explored on the Blue Hill mountains. The trailside museum on the Milton side of the mountains is a good nature museum sponsored by the Audubon society.

stacked on the floor of the office because of a lack of space, have caused few problems for the Financial Aid Office, but not for the students. The students whose files were lost are now required to resubmit their parent's 1985 tax returns, as well as their own.

Students will also have to redo the financial aid application they originally filled out and resubmit transcripts. According to a secretary in the Financial Aid Office none of the students whose files were thrown away will be penalized and it will not interfere with their fall registration. The mix up will not affect funding for next year.

SPORTS

Suffolk sports in brief

By Maureen Pirone

Cross Country

The women's and men's cross country teams will blend a mixture of proven veterans and hopeful newcomers in hopes of successful seasons this year for Coach Joe Walsh.

Coach Walsh cites the major difficulty in the cross country schedule is the opening meet, which is just a week and a half into the school year. However, he is optimistic about the talent he will be coaching.

Women's Cross Country

Returning from last year's women's team are junior Meg Leary and Senior Connie Hatton. "They've been the backbone of the team the last three years," says Walsh. "Both of their performances could be enhanced by newcomers."

Two hopeful newcomers are freshmen Anne Tolan and Beth Cary. Tolan, a graduate of North Quincy High, was a member of the school's cross country team, while Cary, was a member of Wellesley High's cross country teams.

Men's Cross Country

Returning for the men this year is Matt Hanley, whom Coach Walsh says is in good shape. Joining Hanley will be two familiar faces to Suffolk athletics. Chip Forrest, a member of the baseball and hockey teams, brings his finesse and speed to the cross country team. "He has a lot of ability," says Walsh. Joining Forrest will be his teammate from the baseball and hockey teams, John Poigot. This will be Poigot's first season in cross country competition.

Two hopefuls to the team will be freshmen Jerome Thomas, a Cambridge Rindge and Latin graduate, and Jerome Cody, a transfer from Mass Maritime Academy.

Coach Walsh welcomes anyone interested in competing in cross country competition. The teams meet every Saturday in various meets and invitations.

Suffolk appoints new soccer coach

By Maureen Pirone

Wellesley native Guido Verdelli, former head coach of Norwich University's indoor soccer team, was recently named Suffolk's new soccer coach. He will replace Brenden Considine, who returned to his native Ireland.

Verdelli is certainly no stranger to the sport, bringing with him much talent and knowledge of the game. He was the captain of Wellesley High's varsity soccer team, and was named to the Boston Globe's All-Scholastic team. He continued his participation in soccer during his college years, receiving many honors in the process. Verdelli

Soccer

The varsity soccer team will kick off their 1987 schedule this Thursday against Bridgewater State College.

Brenden Considine, last season's coach, has returned to Ireland, and will be replaced by Guido Verdelli.

The team, which will play 14 games from September through October, will be under new leadership this season.

Returning from last year's squad will Steve Golden, Jim Curran, Jeff Ceretani, Bill Price. Dennis Broughton, Ron Ross, William Molokwu, and Hasaan Kafel. Newcomers to the team include Henry Breen from Matignon and Ed Caggiano from Miltonborough Academy.

The soccer team holds its practices from four to six o'clock at the MDC Charlesgate Field.

Golf

The men's golf team will participate in the Little Four Tournament, a round robin format, with Bentley College as their first opponent. The team will then go on to face Clark and WPT.

Michael Maloney, Neil Patel, Mark Luzaitus, Paul Connolly, Phil Mercier, Rick Norman, and John Rorke are expected to return from last year's team.

Coach Tony Farma anticipates at least a half dozen new performers who have been playing regularly over the summer.

Women's Tennis

The women's tennis team swings into action tomorrow against Eastern Nazarene, the first of 14 opponents on the year for the women.

Returning from last year will be Dawn McCauley and Jonalyn Agri. The team, however, has lost Donnan Garibaldi and Paula Francize to graduation. They will also be without Fiora Fonzi, who is suffering from a nagging leg injury.

Freshman Carol Santoro and transfer Tara Bartlett are also looking to make the team.

Next Semester, Put Out to Sea

The unique SEAmester program allows students to earn 16 credits in 9 unforgettable weeks sailing the Atlantic and Caribbean.

In the last 10 years, more than 400 undergraduates from 80 campuses across the country have earned credits in marine biology, coastal ecology, ichthyology, oceanography, navigation, and maritime history and literature—all the while sailing the tall ship and putting in at such ports of call as Nantucket, Mystic, Sag Harbor, Newport News, Beaufort, Miami, Rum Cay, Santo Domingo and St. Thomas.

SEAmester is part of the renowned Marine Science program at the Southampton Campus of Long Island University. There are still some openings for the cruise starting in September, 1987, but space is limited so act now. Return the coupon or call (516) 283-4000 ext. 117.
